MANY of those for whom this work was especially intended have been impatient for its appearance, and have felt that the publication has been needlessly delayed. All such are invited candidly to consider the circumstances connected with its preparation. It is believed that these fully justify the apparent delay.

At the close of the last hour of the Jubilee, the undersigned were appointed a Committee to publish a Memorial Volume. They had not sufficient time to consider whether they could perform the service, but their hearts would not allow them positively to decline attempting it. Among the difficulties which they especially felt, was the fact that no provision had been made for the necessary expense, and the Editors could not go forward without such a guarantee.

When, after the lapse of a year, a pecuniary basis for the publication had been secured, the unfinished, but not neglected, work was resumed with fresh vigor. The materials gathered before the Jubilee Anniversary were comparatively meagre. The notices of the Alumni were insufficient in number to render the work worthy of its purpose. Accordingly, letters, circulars, and printed lists of those whom the Committee could not trace, were widely distributed. This was a task requiring, for any proper degree of accuracy, patient and prolonged search, and another year was unavoidably occupied in these investigations. We hope that a justification of this may be found in the result, which presents in this volume the sketches of eleven hundred Alumni—seven hundred and fifty living, and three hundred and fifty deceased—representing every class of the half-century, and every quarter of the globe. It is proper to say that the term "Alumni" has been used in rather a general sense, so as to include not only graduates, but others who were long enough connected with the Institution to receive somewhat of its stamp, and to be identified with its history.

The work has proved one of unexpected magnitude, has been attended by unavoidable delays in preparation and in printing, and has been gratuitously performed, at the call of the Alumni, by those who have been continually pressed by their regular professional engagements. As the volume is not a mere record of Jubilee Exercises, as many anticipated it would be, but a History of the Institution during its First Half-Century, containing matter not only valuable to the University, but important to the Denomination, the Committee soon decided that undue haste would be a greater evil than any necessary delay. For the sake of all possible accuracy, considerable time has been taken for the presswork. With a view to completeness, even at the risk of being charged with anachronism, the editors have noted events occurring since 1869, so far as known, in the Missionary Record, in Sketches of Alumni, and in other parts of the volume.

Many will regret that the biographical notices of Alumni are so brief, and that the instances are so numerous in which there is record of only the name and the class, or the year of entrance. Not all even of graduates are represented by sketches. Some of them failed to report, and to know the full number of graduates in any class, the reader must refer to the Lists of Graduates near the end of the volume. Among the Sketches of Alumni, under nearly every year, are notices of some who did not graduate, but who were for a considerable time connected with the class. It is obvious that even brief sketches of two thousand students would demand much larger space than the limits of such a work would allow. Of those who entered after the extension of the course in 1833, the Editors have solicited reports from those only who went as far as through the Sophomore Year. From some whose progress fell short of that point reports had been received before the Jubilee, and notices of such have therefore been inserted with the rest. It has been necessary throughout to abridge carefully and to print closely. Most of the sketches have been condensed without the omission of important facts, although interesting details have often been necessarily omitted. The original manuscripts, however, have been preserved for future reference in the library of the University. The work of abridgment was difficult and delicate, since the effect of mere statistics on the one hand, and the excess of personal elements on the other, were equally to be avoided. If it shall seem to the general reader that the limits of good taste are in any instance transgressed, an apology may be found in the unique character of this portion of the work, as designed for classmates and fellow-students, for whom these personal features will have special relish.

In a considerable number of instances the Editors have made a brief record of the public life of Alumni, in respect to whom no communication has been received. These will generally be recognized by the absence of any notice of birth and marriage.

It will be seen that the sketches embrace no eulogy of the living, and no reproach of either the living or the dead. As the Alumni Association intend hereafter to publish annually obituary notices of Alumni, it is hoped that facts relative to such as from time to time shall decease, will be promptly forwarded to the Secretary of the Alumni Association.

Among the Sketches of Alumni, the heading, "Besides Graduates of the Collegiate Department," etc., indicates graduates from Theology who were not in the College. It implies that all Theological graduates who had previously graduated from the Collegiate Department are noticed under the year of Collegiate graduation.

Quite a number of names included among the sketches, particularly about 1850, are of men who graduated elsewhere. Notices of these are due to the strength of former class relations. Sketches have been inserted of all such as reported themselves, and the fact of graduation elsewhere is invariably stated.

The Editors tender their hearty thanks to such members of the Decade and Class Committees as faithfully discharged the duties devolving upon them, and to many others whose voluntary services have been of great value. Without the co-operation of many, this collection of biographical notices would have been an impossibility. Especial reference should be made to Rev. Jirah D. Cole, D.D., class of

'26, who secured most of the sketches in the first Decade, many in the second, and some in the later periods. The first Decade alone cost him the writing of four hundred letters, besides the use of printed circulars. The Editors feel peculiarly indebted also to Prof. J. R. Eaton, and to Messrs. J. C. Ward, L. J. Matteson, and J. B. Child, for painstaking work cheerfully performed.

Much labor has been expended upon the Catalogues. It is hoped that they will be so used that the Alumni will be generally known to one another, and our Alma Mater kept familiar with the history of her many sons. It should be observed that, in the "General Catalogue," the word "entered" means "entered the Institution," without indicating whether Theo. Sem., College, or Grammar School. In the great mass of instances it would belong to the last.

The final reading of the Sketches shows that the War Record is not complete. The names of some appear in the War Record without indication of the Class, because they had not entered College, were in the Institution but a short time, or belonged to the Partial Course.

Great care has been taken in the printing and proof-reading. As the sketches, however, necessarily went to the press, not in continuous manuscript, but in separate sheets having no obvious connection with one another, it is probable that some errors in arrangement have escaped notice. Moreover, it is impossible that a record of so many thousands of dates and names of persons and places, written by so many different hands, should be free from errors of manuscript and typography, especially as the proof has been read at a distance from the press. The Editors crave charitable judgment for all such mistakes that may be detected. It is proper to say that the responsibility of carrying the work through the press has devolved upon Dr. Bronson and Prof. Andrews. The former prepared for the press the Proceedings of the Semi-Centennial Anniversary, the first four Decades of Alumni Sketches, and the General Catalogue. The latter prepared for the press and read proof of all the remaining matter. Their previous editorial work involved the sending of one thousand letters and fifteen hundred circulars. In defence against possible criticism, the Editors will be pardoned in thus alluding to the arduous labor which these two gentlemen have performed.

The account of the Proceedings of the Jubilee, although meagre, will serve as a pleasant reminder after this interval to those who were present, and will aid the imagination and contribute to the enjoyment of the many more who were absent. Editorial comment on the Jubilee Addresses in prose and verse would be superfluous, if not impertinent. They were heard with great delight by the throng in attendance, and have permanent historical value.

Alumni, and friends of the University generally, will all be grateful for the portraits by which the volume is illuminated and embellished. These have added somewhat to its cost, although the steel-plates have, in most instances, been furnished by individuals or their friends, to whom the Editors hereby tender hearty thanks. Dr. Nathaniel Kendrick's portrait is accompanied by the title of "First President." As he was elected President, and, although he declined, virtually acted as such, this designation was regarded just.

The Editors are sensible how imperfectly they have done their work, but are nevertheless confident that the volume will do much to renew and extend the acquaintance of the Alumni with one another, that it will deepen the conviction of the magnitude and importance of ministerial training, and all higher education, and that it will be not only a memorial of the past history of Madison University, but an earnest of her power and progress in the future.

SEMI-CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY
OF
MADISON UNIVERSITY.

PROCEEDINGS OF JUBILEE WEEK.

At the denominational anniversaries held in Chicago, Ill., in 1867, there was a meeting of the Alumni of Hamilton, in which, under a resolution offered by Rev. J. D. Cole, D. D., a committee was appointed to make arrangements for a general meeting at Commencement in July, 1868. In the Spring of 1868, at a large and enthusiastic meeting of the Alumni held in New York City, the following committee was appointed and directed to report at the next meeting in Hamilton a programme for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary, August, 1869.

At the annual meeting in 1868, the committee presented a report of which the following is an extract :

“ * * * A history fraught with such events and enriched by such memories as belong to the early struggles and triumphs of Madison University, deserves to be rehearsed and recorded. The faith and prayers, the unflagging zeal and arduous, life-long toils of the founders and fathers of the University, and of those who have received and worn their mantles, as well as of the men of martyr-spirit whom she has sent out, and who have carried her escutcheon, “Deo ac Veritati,” round the world, and embalmed her name in every language of the East,—are monuments such as few Institutions of any country have reared in the period of five short decades. And it is due, alike to her, and to ourselves, her sons, to gather at the old homestead, to re-count these memories, to recall these names, to re-kindle in our hearts our admiration for the virtues which have here been illustrated, and to lay in the lap where we were nurtured our grateful and our filial offerings.

Your committee considered it especially desirable—a sine qua non, to the full success and enjoyableness of the occasion, that a Jubilee offering of not less than $200,000 be secured before the close of the year. This will require no little labor on the part of those to whom it is directly committed; but it can be done, and will be done, if every friend and alumnus of the University do but emulate, in some small degree, the spirit which has ruled her sons and patrons for the fifty years now closing. We do therefore most earnestly recommend that early and vigorous efforts be initiated to compass this object.

The times amid which the Jubilee occurs; the condition of our own country and of the world, and the calls which come in multiplied intonations from every quarter for men of the ripest and broadest culture are considerations, which, coupled as they properly may be, with an honest and noble pride to see our Alma Mater, just as she is entering the cycle of her second half century, advancing and maintaining her place as a first-class Institution, seem to require this at our hands. Thus our grateful memories of the past will be supplemented by a wise and liberal forecast for the future."

The programme of exercises proposed for the day was as follows:

INVOCATION.....	By the President of the Alumni.
PRAYER.....	By the oldest Alumnus present.
ADDRESS OF WELCOME....	By the President of the University.
ORIGINAL ODE, to be sung in concert by the Alumni.....	By T. A. T. Hanna.

WAR RECORD—Prof. L. M. Osborn, Gen. P. P. Brown, Hon. T. W. Osborn.

The days of the Jubilee showed that no pains had been spared by these committees to accomplish the purpose of their appointment. Communications of inquiry and of invitation went through the land and to the ends of the earth wherever the sons of Hamilton were known to reside. Affectionate responses poured in from far and near. There was abundant proof that our Alma Mater has a large place in the hearts of her Alumni.

A brief account not only of the Jubilee day but also of the anniversary week is here put on record for future reference.

The examination of all departments and classes occupied four days, Wednesday to Saturday, July 28–31 inclusive. On the evening of Friday the Annual Exhibition of the University Grammar School was held in the Baptist Church. Thirty-nine young men graduated, of whom sixteen delivered original addresses. Saturday evening was enlivened by the Annual Prize Declamation, consisting of recitations by twelve students chosen in equal numbers from the three lower classes of the University.

On Sunday morning, August 1, the church edifice was thronged by eager listeners to hear the sermon preached before the Education Society by Wm. H. Shailer, D. D. of the class of '35, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Portland, Me. After fitting and touching allusions to the peculiarity of the occasion he announced as his text, 1 Cor. 7: 7, "Every man hath his proper gift from God," and discussed upon the variety of abilities and attainments in the ministry, in a manner well adapted to stimulate to the most diligent use of the gifts conferred and also to excite thankfulness for the measure of divine blessing which surely attends the faithful exercise of one's ransomed powers whatever the appointed sphere may be. Prayer was offered and the benediction pronounced by the venerable Robert Powell, of Michigan, the only survivor of the immortal "thirteen" who had formed the Education Society more than fifty years before. The afternoon was given to conference and prayer. Fervent prayers and thanksgivings were offered and memorable experiences related by veteran laborers from widely distant fields. It was good to be there.

The annual meeting of the Society for Missionary Inquiry was held in the evening. Prayer was offered by J. N. Murdock, D. D., Home Secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union. The sermon was preached by A. H. Burlingham, D. D. of St.

Louis, Mo., of the class of '48; text, Collossians 1: 23-29; theme, Missions a Spontaneous Result of the Spirit of the Gospel. A wide field of thought was traversed, fitting tributes were paid to the character of those who had gone from the society to mission fields, and the impression deepened that Christians must lose the spirit of their Lord and of His Apostles before they can give up the work of missions.

The Education Society held its annual meeting Monday afternoon. One hundred and eleven students had during the year received pecuniary aid to the amount of twelve thousand dollars. Addresses were made by Rev. J. F. Elder, of Orange, N. J., Rev. John Peddie, of Albany, S. S. Cutting, D. D., Sec'y of the Educational Commission, Rev. Daniel Reed, LL. D., President of Shurtleff College, Ill., Rev. Thomas Price, Ph. D., of Wales, and others.

Monday evening was devoted to the Literary Societies, Aeonian and Adelpian. Prayer was offered by R. Jeffrey, D. D., of Cincinnati. An elaborate and comprehensive address was delivered by C. W. Anable, D. D., theological graduate of 1854, pastor of the Baptist Church in Old Cambridge, Mass.; theme, the Service rendered by Science to Christianity. B. F. Taylor, Esq. of Chicago, Ill., gave the poem, so inspiring and so apropos to the Jubilee that its publication in the memorial volume was demanded with one accord.

As the Jubilee services were to be held on Wednesday, the graduating exercises of both the theological and collegiate departments took place on Tuesday.

The services were as follows:

Prayer by Rev. Robert Powell. A. H. BALL, Amherst, Mass., A Sword, not Peace. A. M. PRENTICE, Hamilton, Christianity the Fact of History. E. C. ROMINE, Stockton, N. J., The Prime element in Ministerial Character. C. C. SMITH, Piscataway, N. J., Breadth and Intensity in the Preacher.

After intermission the University Commencement followed:

Address to Class by the President. Conferring of Degrees.

In the evening of Tuesday the special exercises of the Jubilee commenced. Prayer was offered by S. B. Grant, D. D., of Fitchburg, Mass., class of '43. The various committees appointed at the previous anniversary gave partial reports, showing that though much labor had been performed, much remained to be done before the class histories would be ready for publication.

The morning of Wednesday brought clouds which soon passed away after giving a refreshing rain that brought fully out the beauty of the delightful valley and the surrounding hills. As the thronging visitors reached the University Hill and gazed over the almost unequaled scenery spread far around, there seemed to them no exaggeration in the poem of the previous evening, which described it as having "A little of earth and a great deal of heaven." To the veterans whose personal acquaintance with this sacred spot had begun more than half a century before, and to the youthful graduate just buckling on his armor for the dusty, smoke-enveloped field, to the men who had come from southern savannas, from western prairies, or from rocky eastern shores, from Pacific coast, from stations in China, or Burmah, or from hills along the Bramahpootra in sight of the Himalayas, to these men whether making new acquaintances, or in looking through smiles and tears on the faces of old friends not seen for tens or scores of years, the dear old hill seemed a heavenly place, and not far away seemed heaven itself where the Redeemer of all kindreds will join the Assembly and Church of the First Born.

The exercises at Alumni Hall were commenced by singing the Coronation Hymn. A. H. Burlingham, D. D., president of the Association of Alumni, was presiding officer of the day. Prayer was offered by Rev. Francis W. Emmons of Massachusetts, of the class of '24, the oldest alumnus present.

E. Dodge, D. D., LL. D., President of the University, gave the address of welcome. Dr. Burlingham made a fitting response.

Rev. T. A. T. Hanna, class of '64, read his Ode prepared for the occasion. It was sung by the assembly in the tune of Star-spangled Banner.

Geo. W. Eaton, D. D., LL. D., President of the Theological Seminary, then followed with portions of his Historical Discourse, and Rev. W. C. Richards, Ph. D., delivered the Jubilee Poem.

The dinner, of which a thousand partook, was spread beneath a most capacious tent pitched in front of the eastern edifice, in full view of the magnificent scenery below and around, on which eager eyes feasted as gladly as did their sharpened appetites upon the generous repast with which the tables were loaded. Thanks were voted to Mr. Solomon Baker, the chief butler, and to Capt. C. W. Underhill, class of '62, the chief marshal of the day.

We are aided in our report of the post-prandial proceedings by the account in the Hamilton Republican and by a phonographic report of Rev. S. S. Bidwell, class of '58.

Dr. Burlingham, the presiding officer, gave the following sentiment:

"The original thirteen Corporate Founders of Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution; one alone survives, a living link to us of the glorious memories of fifty years ago."

In response, Father Powell spoke of his feelings on visiting, the day before, the house in which the original thirteen met and formed the society. He looked around for the fathers, Hascall and Kendrick, Payne and Olmstead, and their companions in this great work, but he saw only their resting places and their monuments, the noblest of which are these University edifices and the men trained in them for their glorious work.

Dr. Eaton being called up as "one whom the friends and alumni always loved to hear," expressed the opinion that the "audience had had enough of his tongue already," but favored them with a glowing eulogy of the "fathers and founders," with all of whom he had had no little acquaintance.

The next sentiment was as follows:

"The early professors and teachers, Hascall, Kendrick, and their associates—the impress of their lives, characters, and counsels still remains, and is the glory of Madison University."

Response was made by J. D. Cole, D.D., of Illinois. He said that his personal acquaintance with Professor Hascall began forty-seven years ago, when he became a member of the Institution. Hascall was its life and soul. It was born in his heart. He was the moving spirit in this enterprise in the Madison Association. The people of the denomination feared a man-made ministry. Most of the ministers shared the feeling. Dr. Welch in his early ministry had no sympathy with those who went to Hamilton, and once expressed this most pointedly to the speaker. Alfred Bennet once intended to oppose the educational enterprise in a sermon before the Association, but had no freedom of utterance, and soon became one of its warmest friends. Under such opposing influences Professor Hascall began his great work. He was the first professor as well as the first mover. He was a man of great enterprise, patience, and perseverance, and of a self-sacrificing spirit. His relation to the whole movement, whose grand results we to-day see, ought to be more fully known and appreciated. Dr. Kendrick at first came over twice a week from Eaton, but soon resided permanently in Hamilton, and united his whole influence with that of Hascall. No other two men had so much of the confidence of the people of the region, and no other men could have carried on the work with so little opposition.

A copious shower made it necessary to return to Alumni Hall during the delivery of Dr. Cole's address.

The President of the Day called upon Dr. Shailer, who at Hamilton got not only a good education, but also got Professor Hascall's daughter for a wife. Dr. Shailer gave more than an intimation that he considered all he got at Hamilton as good, very good. He said that Kendrick and Hascall were both needed in their day. Professor Hascall was a man of very strong faith, which was abundantly shown by his works. He was a man of action. On his death-bed he said, "I should not be willing to go if there was not something to be done in heaven." Dr. Kendrick was a man of much thought and vigor.

Next sentiment:

"Foreign Missions.—Hamilton gave to them her first-fruits, and has not withheld her choicest. Where the work has been hardest, the danger thickest, the darkness deepest, her sons have nobly stood or gloriously fallen for Christ."

Miles Bronson, D.D., missionary to Assam, a graduate of '36, responded:

"Thirty-three years ago I went from this place to my distant field of labor. Words cannot express what I feel in reviving the associations of dear old Hamilton. When I was here with Dean, and Comstock, and Vinton, and others of like spirit, we felt that there was no enterprise so glorious as that of dispelling the darkness of heathenism by pouring in the light of Christianity. When on our distant field we were beset, or overworked, or prostrated in sickness, and felt that we might soon fall, we were comforted by the thought that Hamilton would send others to take our places. So it proved. Thomas fell when he had got within sight of the trees around the mission house. His place was soon filled. E. P. Scott has just fallen nobly following his Master. His place must be filled at once. The work is hard but glorious. I know all the trials of missionary life, but if I stood here a young man, as I did thirty-three years ago, I would at once set out for the same toil, and the same reward, in the same field."

Rev. A. T. Rose, of the Burman Mission, was warmly welcomed to the halls from which he went forth sixteen years before. He said :

"My heart is greatly affected by your welcome. There are those who think and say that missionaries should never return to their native land—that they need no vacations for any reason. Do the Churches sympathize with missionaries as they did twenty-five years ago? Is the missionary spirit in Hamilton what it was formerly? If this spirit be lost, will the world be the better for our having lived in it? I knew Abbot, and I have known hundreds of those who were converted under his labors. I was with Vinton when his eyes closed in death. A rich crown will be his. At the grave of Comstock I asked: 'Is this all there now is of Comstock?' No, no! He yet speaks in Burmah and in this land. God gave us Burmah. Let us go in and fully possess it."

J. N. Murdock, D.D., Home Secretary of the Missionary Union, said :

"I am glad to be at the fountain head of so much blessed missionary influence. There are no more noble men than those who have gone forth from these walls to preach the gospel to the heathen. The crowning glory of Hamilton is its missionary history. The work of Missions requires men of the best training. Such men you have furnished, and will furnish in all time to come."

Next sentiment :

"Home Missions.—The wilderness and the solitary place have been made glad for them. The Alumni of Hamilton have been the true 'Army of Occupation' on the frontiers of our country."

Rev. J. L. Moore, D.D., of Ohio, a graduate of 1831, was called on to respond. He was one of those who originated the Western Association of the Institution. They saw that in the future the Great Valley would control the Continent. He gave details of the Home Mission work in its beginning. While on his way it pleased the Lord to try him by fire, literal fire, by which his sight was nearly lost, and his visage marred, but this had, in various ways, proved to be for his advantage and for the good of Home Missions.

A song, the words of which were composed by James H. Andrews, class of '68, and the music by Rev. T. G. Wright, theological class of '42, was sung by as many of the "old choir" as could find places and notes.

Reminiscences were here suspended in order to hear the report of the Committee on the Jubilee Fund.

Professor P. B. Spear, D.D., Professor of Hebrew, and Treasurer of the University, reported what had already been done, and what yet remained to be done to make this part of the Jubilee a complete success. His cheerful confidence had the best immediate results. He obtained more thousands than he had demanded.

The scene was one of extraordinary interest and profit. It beggared description, and those who were unfortunately not present can know only the names and sums as given in Dr. Spear's Report on Jubilee Fund.

Rev. Dr. Price of Wales, and Rev. Mr. Henry of Ireland, being present as a deputation of Baptists of Ireland to the Baptists of America, were welcomed by a resolution, to which they each eloquently responded. Mr. Henry urged the vast emigration of the Irish to this country as a reason why American Baptists should aid the Home Mission work of Irish Baptists.

Dr. Price, in allusion to the large number of the Spear family who had contributed, one after another, at intervals, during Dr. Spear's occupation of the platform, remarked that in all financial engagements that he had witnessed, he never before saw such a bundle of Spears. He remarked upon the difference between Wales and the United States as to the difficulties of the educational enterprise. Here the want seems to be of men—there the want seems to be of means. He promised to send forty promising men, who can preach already, if he might have the pledge that they would be supported through a course of study.

Next sentiment—

“The representatives of the daughters of our good old mother.”

Prof. A. C. KENDRICK, D.D., Professor of Greek in the University of Rochester, being warmly cheered as he was called forward, responded in an eloquent address of mingled humor and pathos. He had been invited by a friend of Hamilton to “repent and return home.” He felt very penitent and very much at home. He had two homes, Hamilton and Rochester. He was proud of both, and wished he was worthy of either. He at first hesitated whether to come to this maternal, filial, fraternal, sororial gathering, but was glad he had come. He had been walking around the old paths and looking over the scenery, the parallel of which can be seen from the windows of no other University in the world. He had looked again at the portraits of Hascall, and Cobb, and Payne, and Burchard, and the other founders. He had looked again over the list of its students, than whom the world has no nobler men, and he blessed God for Hamilton. Hamilton could have no blessing that would not give him great joy. He and others went out to build at Rochester because God had so ordered. Both there and here “the workmen had builded better than they knew.” It was predicted that “at Rochester there would be shipwreck," and that "Hamilton would soon come to ashes." What ashes these are that we to-day look upon! Dr. Kendrick concluded by congratulating the University on having such a treasurer. The slightest waving of his magic wand brought out such treasures, that he must be a lineal descendant of the veritable Shake-spear himself.

Other prepared dishes of the feast, of which the company failed, for lack of time, to taste, were as follows :

"The patrons of Madison University: The sons of our Alma Mater cherish with sincere gratitude their memory and honor them, both the living and the dead, for their devotion and their munificent contributions to the cause of general and ministerial education."

J. B. COLGATE, Esq., C. P. SHELDON, D.D., and D. G. COREY, D.D.

"The patrons of ministerial education in sister States."

JUDGE RUNYON, New Jersey, and S. S. CUTTING, D.D.

"Patriotism—The sons of Madison love their country, and fly to her rescue in the hour of her peril."

Gen. P. P. BROWN.

"The religious element which has so largely distinguished the Institution in the past is essential to its highest prosperity in the future."

Prof. T. J. CONANT, D.D., J. W. SARLES, D.D.

"The Hamilton student—from the people and to the people."

R. JEFFREY, D.D.

"Greeting to the alumni of other kindred Institutions."

Rev. E. A. LECOMPTE, of Cambridge and Newton, Mass., and Rev. S. H. KENNARD, of Lewisburg and Princeton.

"Science—The place now assigned it in Madison University is a fitting recognition of its relation and service to Christianity and learning."

Prof. A. S. BICKMORE, Ph.D., responded, stating that the collection now in the museum is large and valuable, prized at $13,000. It embraces a complete assemblage of the birds of North America, an extended collection of European birds, and a large variety of the birds of the Tropics. Many of these the Professor secured while travelling in the East.

The committee on the memorial volume reported a recommendation that such a volume be published, and that B. F. Bronson, D.D., be chief editor, aided by J. D. Cole, D.D., W. H. Shailer, D.D., Prof. A. M. Beebe, and Prof. N. L. Andrews. The report and recommendations were adopted.

Such had been the interest of the day that a conclusion of the services could not be made until the darkness compelled it. Rev. D. G. Corey, D.D., pronounced the benediction. Then the alumni, with solemn joy, bade each other and their Alma Mater an affectionate adieu.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME

BY

REV. E. DODGE, D.D., LL.D., PRESIDENT OF MADISON UNIVERSITY.

Gentlemen of the Alumni: we welcome you to your Alma Mater. Friends of Madison University: we offer to you our cordial greetings.

You have left your homes to participate in the festivities of this anniversary, and to exchange the congratulations which this occasion inspires. You will here refresh the memories of other days, and renew the friendships of other years. You will mingle with the men of the past, and unite yourselves with the men of the present and of the future. You will thus re-enter the life of the University, breathe anew and afresh its atmosphere, take on its responsibilities, and share in the blessed fruitions of all its labors, and you will carry back to your homes the abiding conviction of its present prosperity and of its future growth.

Fifty years ago, God planted this school in Hamilton, "on the sides of the north, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth." He had mapped out this region for Madison University. The climate is favorable for study. The cold of winter invigorates, the beauty of summer inspires, and the air bathes us, by day and by night, with its own fresh life. Nature is steadfast. The same contour of country will remain, to hold fixed forever the old associations. God's smile will ever play along these valleys, and his angels will ever rest on these hill-tops. The same broad fields will open upon you with their quiet beauty, and the same old boulders will look out upon you from their resting-places. The fountains at which you drank in your youth shall offer their waters to you in your old age. The very trees which your hands have planted shall greet you at your coming, and the forests shall but change with your change, marking the growth of advancing years. Thus nature will gather and garner forever even the gleanings of our great harvest.

We gratefully, then, accept our location: The quiet of the country invites to repose; and repose is essential to high culture. Easy intellectual growth, free from the taint of self-conceit, and from the weakness of hurried thought, is best secured apart from the heated life of great cities. Crystallization takes place most readily and most completely when free from every disturbing influence. Besides, what is great in humanity can be known in seclusion. What is little can best be left to the experience of later years. The study of the weaknesses of our nature in early life tends to undermine all faith in that nature. The student will know man as he knows himself; and he will become a saving power among men in proportion to the purity and loftiness of his ideals. To adopt any other principle, and to follow any other method, is to substitute the arts of vulgar ambition for the innate power of conviction, and for the moral force of a symmetrical character. Solitude, then, in the months of study, and society in the weeks of vacation, are the chief outward conditions of an ample intellectual growth. They are the foci which determine the sphere of a full human life. All this we secure in Hamilton. So much we may claim for ourselves without pretension on the one hand, or detraction on the other.

The school has its distinctive type. As it grows from youth to maturity, it will follow the idea and the law of its own life. Its genius is indicated in the close union of culture and of religion. Open to all, impartial in its dealings with all, and offering to all a generous course of study, the University is yet a child, and so a representative of the Baptist faith. We ought not to disguise from ourselves, or from the public, that we have fixed religious opinions, and that these opinions are in full accord with the denomination to which we belong. They are not voiced in the lecture-room; but, as convictions, they will find utterance in the privacy of domestic life, in the freedom of social intercourse, and often on occasions incident to a public position. In these ways the religious faith of a faculty tells for that branch of the Christian church which it represents. But, besides all this, and better than all this, there is the unconscious influence of a body of men who, however they may differ on other points, are one and the same in their churchly relations. Their characters are a standing witness to the truth. Their united profession constitutes a moral force, silent, continuous, and potential. All this is secured when the unity of the denominational life of an Institution is unbroken. Such is the case with your Alma Mater.

Gentlemen: Madison University is to have a future. Our great memories are more than balanced by greater hopes. The Centennial will witness larger endowments, larger faculties, larger attendance, higher grades of study, and more ample accommodations and facilities of instruction. Let us, then, forgetting the narrowness of our selfish ends, seek to contribute to that grand consummation.

FOR THE

JUBILEE OF MADISON UNIVERSITY,

AUGUST, 1869.

BY THOMAS A. T. HANNA.

AIR :—“ The Star Spangled Banner.”

From thy hill-girdled throne, ALMA MATER, we hear
Thy trumpet of Jubilee, gloriously swelling ;
And thy children from all the wide earth now appear,
To greet thee at home, in thy beautiful dwelling ;
Where in years of our prime, in the old hallowed time,
Glad as children we strayed o'er these hillsides sublime—
Where we gazed till the red light of sunset was spread,
Like a crown of all glory, adorning thy head—
Where we watched, till the red light of sunset, far shed,
Like a blood-crimsoned mantle around thee was spread.

II.

So around thee a blood-crimsoned robe hath been thrown,
By the Monarch of Life, at whose word thou wast founded ;
And the Victor who treadeth the winepress alone,
By the arm of his might hath thy ramparts surrounded ;
So through time mayst thou stand, as a light to our land,
Enkindled and fed by his infinite hand ;
So by reason of thee, the far isles of the sea,
And the peoples in darkness, illumined shall be—
The deserts, the wastes, and the isles of the sea,
Shall blossom, and sing, and be gladdened by thee.

III.

Lo, thy children not all can salute thee to-day,
For the voice, sweet and strong, of salvation's Commander,
From the clang of life's battle hath called them away,
They have left our grand host for an army far grander ;
Where their arms are laid down at the terrible throne,
And their rest hath a sweetness whose depth is unknown.
For thy dead on the field, let thy high song be pealed,
For thy sons who by death have their testament sealed—
Ye who yet bear the shield, and the double sword wield,
Haste to fill the ranks thinned of the dead on the field.

IV.

ALMA MATER, thy children rejoice with thee now,
For the words writ in fire and in gold on thy pages ;
With one heart of profoundest thanksgiving we bow
To the Lord of the stars, and the Fountain of Ages ;
Arise, then, and shine in a splendor divine,
And put on the fair robes of God's gift that are thine—
For his word has been given, thou art blazoned in heaven,
And thy work shall stand fast when creation is riven ;
AS FOR GOD AND FOR TRUTH through the years thou hast striven,
So thy record is graved on the pillars of heaven.

Historical Discourse

DELIVERED AT THE

SEMI-CENTENARY OF MADISON UNIVERSITY,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5TH, 1869.

BY

REV. GEO. W. EATON, D.D., LL.D.,

President of the Hamilton Theological Seminary.

IN addressing myself to the task assigned me in this day's proceedings—a historical sketch of the Institution, whose Semi-Centenary we are gathered to celebrate—I am profoundly impressed with the fact that rarely in the history of any Christian enterprise has the hand of God been more signally and affectingly manifested than in that of the "Hamilton Institution." I use this designation for the whole system of education, especially of the ministerial part, which has been in operation here for the last fifty years.

Its true and full history would be among the grandest monuments ever constructed by the hand of man to the Divine interposition, favor, and care in the labors of His servants in behalf of His cause in the earth. Amid all the errors and infirmities of the human agents in this work, we seem to be treading on holy ground (so clear and indelible are the foot-prints of the Divine Leader) all along the pathway in which the Institution has been led from its feeble inception through varying vicissitudes to its present expansion and world-power. It has had its trials and reverses—its days of darkness and depression, when the strongest faith of its devoted friends staggered and almost failed within them. But time and again it was most impressively demonstrated that all this was but a trial of faith and trust in the superintending care of Him whose face was temporarily hid, and that the darker the hour, the more brightly shone out His face unveiled.

In the highest sense of a history you cannot on this day expect me to furnish anything worthy the name. That would require a large volume with years of careful labor in its preparation. You will not demand of me more than a brief and running sketch of the principal events and changes which have marked the origin and growth of this enterprise. You have a right, however, to claim something more than a dry chronicle of naked facts, simply connected by the law of contiguity of time and place. There is a philosophy or science in history—in the history not of nations only but of Institutions. There is an inner spirit which gives significancy and living organism to the facts, and makes the history itself a consistent whole, instinct, and all aglow, with a pervading intelligence and the radiant evolutions of mind, purpose and will, in its ever unfolding progress.

Before entering upon details, I propose to submit a general view setting forth a series of comparisons, or rather of contrasts, between the then and the now, of the beginning and ending of the period under review, as relating directly or indirectly to the Institution at Hamilton. Then the Baptist denomination in this State numbered twenty-eight thousand members with three hundred churches and two hundred and thirty ministers; now over one hundred thousand members, with between eight and nine hundred churches and one thousand ministers, pastors and otherwise. Then there were but three liberally educated Baptist ministers west of the Hudson river; now, taking all the "West," they may be counted by the thousand.

Then originated the Baptist Education Society of the State of New York, with a capital to begin with of thirteen dollars, and expenses the first year of its existence amounting to forty-one dollars and twelve cents, twenty-seven dollars and twelve cents being for Jonathan Wade, its first beneficiary; now the Institution established by the Society, embracing the entire system of its operations, has a productive endowment of over two hundred and sixty thousand dollars, and a valuable property besides, making the whole amount of assets four hundred thousand dollars, with no liabilities, not a cent of debt, and the Society expending annually, in its sphere of aiding young men in their preparation for the ministry, some fifteen thousand dollars.

Then the "School," as it was called, opened in the third story of a brick building of very moderate dimensions in the village; now in the way of material accommodations for this "school" there are three large stone edifices located upon a domain of some one hundred and forty acres—edifices ample and commodious for the purpose designed, and adequate to accommodate two hundred students, admirably arranged and fitted up, besides a President's House and other buildings amounting altogether in value to eighty thousand dollars.

Then there was one teacher and one student, with a three years' course dimly shadowed out; now there are twelve teachers, and for the last thirty years the average number of students has been one hundred and sixty annually—rising as high as two hundred and forty and falling as low as half that number—the diminution from causes not affecting the essential elements of its prosperity. There is now a regularly organized University of the first-class with charter privileges of the amplest range, and a Theological Seminary giving a full and critical course of theological study—the whole together affording to the student for the ministry an eight years' course of literary and theological training not inferior to that obtained anywhere else.

The Institution within the fifty years of its existence has sent forth, educated in whole or in part, fifteen hundred ministers of the Gospel, besides hundreds who have entered other professions, law, medicine, teaching, and business avocations. Herein is the crown of rejoicing and the palmary glory of the Institution, for which we would to-day challenge in its behalf the admiration, gratitude and love of this great assembly gathered on this sacred hill to celebrate with special and appropriate ceremonies its fiftieth anniversary.

This glorious mother of so many sons would not on this occasion make much account of her material riches and possessions, and multiplying facilities, steadily accumulating as they have been through her history. These are indeed exponents of her gratifying progress. But as the noble Roman matron in the mantling pride of a sublimely conscious motherhood, she would point to her sons and exclaim, "These are my jewels!" Judge of the worth of the mother by the sons she has borne and reared to intellectual and moral manhood. Verily, "their lines have gone out into all the earth, and their words to the ends of the world." In what part of the world will you not find some son of Hamilton, and wherever found, is he not a prince of God—a workman that needeth not be ashamed—whose power in the cause of truth and righteousness is deeply felt and gratefully acknowledged? Go to Central Asia where tens of thousands of converts from the darkness and bondage of heathenism are witnesses of their effectual working for God and His Kingdom. Go to China, to Japan, to Africa. There you will find their living forms amid sacrifices and privations, and the toil and sweat of their great work; or if not their living forms, their foot-prints on the surface, and their consecrated bones beneath the soil of the dark land they came to illuminate and bless with the light of the Gospel, and where they have left seeds of immortal life in Christ to spring up and bloom and bear fruit in coming days.

That these sons of Hamilton, are as a body, no ordinary men, is attested by the positions which they have been, and are occupying, and the work they have wrought in their respective fields of occupancy. Many of them have been, and are now, pastors of the largest, and most intelligent, most cultivated, and most influential churches in city and country. Some have been Evangelists whose labors have been wonderfully blest in the conversion of many thousands of souls. One veteran Evangelist alone has been the honored instrument in hopefully converting more than one hundred thousand souls.

One of the best evidences of the success of a ministry is the number of immortal souls truly converted under its ministrations. I say one of the best evidences, for a minister of Christ may do much in making "full proof of his ministry" in training souls to a meetness "for the inheritance of the saints in light" and in defending and enforcing the "truth as it is in Jesus," and in the inculcation and diffusion of the principles and spirit of the Gospel, "for the defence of which, he is set." In both these respects the Alumni of Hamilton have shown their power and success in the "things of the Kingdom." We cannot conjecture how many souls have been converted under their ministry—the number would reach several hundred thousands, including the tens of thousands of converts from heathenism. They have, in countless ways, demonstrated their ability to explain and defend the cardinal truths of the Gospel of the Grace of God, and their steadfast attachment to, and loving appreciation, in their own experience, of these truths. Verily the consecrated sons of Hamilton have been "valiant for the truth in the earth"—the truth of God as manifested to the world by his Son Jesus Christ. They have been standard bearers in the "sacramental hosts of God's elect," they have stood firm and steadfast in the faith, they have been guides and bulwarks in a sound and living orthodoxy. There have, indeed, been defections and desertions from the ranks, but only here and there, and not enough to break the solid and shining array of the faithful host embattled for the conquests of truth and righteousness. They have been true to the doctrines of the Christian people they represent, and in their instructions and guidance have been faithful to their highest and holiest interests.

I have thus far been speaking of the pulpit and pastoral labors of the Alumni in their active ministry; but I have a few words to offer in respect to other relations. I have an analysis to present which I have wrought out with great care, and which I believe to be below rather than above the truth. I have been careful to get names and so indentify individuals.

There have been connected with the Institution from its origin about two thousand young men, and of this number I count among the Alumni all who have spent a sufficient length of time under its instruction and influence to receive something of its distinguishing mark—its imprimatur, and to imbibe somewhat of its peculiar spirit. I find among the number some seventy missionaries to the heathen (headed by Wade and Kincaid as its first fruits) who by their character, spirit, and devotion, and the extent of their labors, have indissolubly blended the history of the Institution with the history of foreign missions in connection with the Baptist denomination. I have not been able to ascertain the number who have gone into the home-field. They count by hundreds, and have bravely encountered sacrifices and trials scarcely less than their brethren in the foreign fields, and have made "the wilderness and solitary places glad for them."

I count among the number twenty-one Presidents of chartered Colleges and Universities, eighty-eight Professors of Colleges, and Principals of our higher Academies and Female Seminaries, and sixty-three authors. The list includes only such as have published books of mature thought and permanent value, or have contributed elaborate articles discussing in a thorough and scholarly manner some theme of great importance and interest, to the higher periodical literature, denominational, Christian, and secular. And here, by the way, I have noted one hundred and one Doctors of Divinity and of Law, (mostly the former), the honor having been conferred by different Institutions of the most respectable order. There have been twenty editors of religious and secular journals. The Institution has also had representatives in our State and National Councils who proved themselves worthy of their high position.

The whole country, too, owes a debt to Hamilton for the patriotism of her sons in the terrible war for the Union. Multitudes of the Alumni all over the country left their peaceful and sacred vocations, and hastened to the field of conflict as chaplains, officers and privates. More than fifty of our best students from the different classes, from the Senior in the Theological Seminary to the Junior of the Grammar School, laid aside their books, and went forth armed for the fight. Nearly one-fourth of them were left "dead on the field," with their faces to the foe, and their death wounds in front. As many more were badly wounded—some shot through—and their lives saved as by miracle. Their bravery, intelligence and devotion secured promotion to many, passing up from rank to rank as captains, majors, colonels, and even to a brigadier generalship. Not one failed to do his whole duty in camp, in field, and in the thickest of the fight. The record of Hamilton in the awful crisis of our nation's agony and peril is of the brightest, noblest, and purest kind.

But the Hamilton Institution has not only been the mother of ministers, missionaries, presidents, professors, doctors, legislators, and soldiers;—she has been the means of bringing into being several noble Institutions of Learning worthy of herself. One of her strongest professors and subsequently her honored president may be said to be the founder of Lewisburg University—an Institution which takes rank among our best. And where, I would respectfully and kindly ask, would the "University of Rochester" have been, had it not been for Hamilton? Where? I hear echoed from these surrounding hills. The University of Rochester, it has been said, was a perfect thing from the start, springing in full armor from the old Institution, as Minerva from the head of Jupiter. This is good. We accept the classical figure; but it has also been said by some, that Rochester was the Phœnix springing from the ashes of the old "concern." ASHES! Never was more of immortal and unextinguishable fire covered by ashes before in the world's history.

We may take in a still wider sweep in this view of the influence of Hamilton in our educational enterprises. Numbers of excellent Institutions have been established by her Alumni, taking the model and plan from their Alma Mater, and these are now centres of growing power for good to the cause of sound learning and religion.

It would seem clear enough from the analysis I have given of the Hamilton Alumni that the education and culture here received have been of the most substantial, thorough, and comprehensive kind, adapted to make strong men, men of thought, men of action and influence, and that in the most important and beneficent spheres in the Church and the world.

It will not be an impertinence or even a digression from the purpose of this historical discourse to draw out and set forth just here the reigning type of the Hamilton Alumni as it lies in the conception of the speaker.

When I speak of a type in this connection, I am far from meaning something moulded and shaped by an exterior power acting on passive materials. It has been stated as an objection to Theological Seminaries that their graduates are of one uniform type and "as much alike as candles run in the same mould." This is, of course, a gross caricature as applied to any Institution of the kind; as applied to Hamilton, it has not a single element of truth. In nothing is the Hamilton student more signalized than in a strongly-marked and sharply-defined individuality, which continues to develop itself more and more through his whole course. His fault, if it be a fault, is that he is too emphatically self-asserted. His receptive capacity is slightly contracted and weakened by his keen sense of an independent egoism and a strong self-consciousness. He might perhaps receive and appropriate more from without, if he were not quite so self-reliant upon his own native efficiency. This is a failing, however, that "leans to virtue's side."

Both the teacher and the student are at fault, if, in the course of training, the original norm of personality in the latter is not preserved in its integrity, elicited, and educated up to a full and manly stature of freedom and spontaneity. It is a poor ambition in the instructor to aim to reproduce himself in his pupil, and a miserable slavery in the pupil to yield submissively to such an operation. Great original force in an instructor tends unconsciously to discharge itself into a receptive mind; but unless the mind reacts with its native energy upon the force, and works it in among its own living elements, there is really no power accumulated.

The excellence of any product is tested both by its material and by its making. If either is defective, the value is diminished. Now the formation of character is the result of two distinct forces mutually operating upon each other. There is the original force of the mind itself and the force of external circumstances and influences—the native material with its active energies, and the formative and moulding appliances from without.

What is the nature of the elements which, in combination, form the character of the Hamilton student? The great body of the young men who resort hither for an education, are from the poorer and middling classes of pious families where they have from early childhood received Christian nurture. They have not been sophisticated by the profane artificialities of the gay and godless life predominant in wealthy and fashionable society. They are already, in most part, consecrated to a sacred vocation, and commence and pursue their studies under the over-shadowings of a high and holy purpose and the solemnity of a conscientious sense of their individual responsibility to God. They have first given themselves to Christ, and then come here to prepare for his service. This is the material we have to deal with. I say nothing of exceptions. We have had some rich and some wayward youth among us. We welcome them to our number, and do all we can for their moral and intellectual culture; and many have been the instances of the consecration of such to a Christian life and to the Christian ministry in the course of their studies. I am speaking now of the ascendant characteristics of the Hamilton students, which give spirit and tone to the mass.

On the other hand, they find here the very best instruction adapted to their demands, from teachers who endeavor conscientiously tiously to do the most for the intellectual and moral training of their pupils, and so to prepare them for the activities and solemnities of their life-work. They aim to elicit the native powers and peculiar tendencies of the students—to make them think for themselves, and stand up firmly, independently and self-reliantly upon their own mental and moral basis. The Hamilton student is therefore preëminently self-centred, self-poised, self-pronounced and self-regulated. He is natural, manly, serious, earnest, loves to study, loves to investigate and think, is practical, intrepid, prompt to take hold of hard work, to go anywhere and endure anything, whereby God is glorified, and man benefited. And so he goes forth from these consecrated walls a living, spontaneous and active power, to take his proper place in the vast and mighty movements of the church and of the world.

It has been depreciatingly said of him that he lacks polish and refinement, and though strong, it is rude strength and not adapted to the culture and grace of the "higher" society. If this be interpreted in its proper meaning, it is a solid compliment. He is not a dandy or a dilettante. He does scorn the fopperies and finicalities, the affectations and facile accommodations to fashion and artificial etiquette of some who desecrate the name of God's ministers. Your regular dandy, wherever found, is one of the smallest of God's creatures, if indeed he be a creature of God at all, and not rather the creature of the tailor and milliner! but a clerical dandy is not only a small creature, he is an irrelevancy—an impertinence. He has no proper place in God's kingdom of nature or of grace. But as very small molecules of matter may exhale a diffusive odor, he is a stench in the nostrils of God and of every sensible man, Christian or infidel. If it be charged that the Hamilton alumnus is not of this order, we are obliged for the compliment; but if it be meant that he is not a gentleman, a Christian gentleman who knows how to be gentle and courteous to all men, and perfectly meet the proprieties and demands of good, considerate, and delicate behavior to men and women of sense and refinement, it is a monstrous libel. The society of this beautiful village into which the Hamilton student is freely admitted, and where he is cordially treated as an equal, is not inferior in intelligence, social culture, and refinement to any other elsewhere found, and its heart is not eaten out by hollow conventionalisms, and artificial modes. Now put these two great elements in the formation of character together—the native force of mind, and the extraneous influence brought to bear upon it through instruction and the diversified range of auxiliary agencies, and there results a type of the educated man which, though endlessly varied and modified by individual peculiarities, may be taken as a general characteristic common to the whole class. It is in this sense that we speak of the type of the Hamilton alumni. We consider it one of the finest types of a full and complete man.

The highest praise of an Institution of learning is that its educational influences in their kind, amount, and practical efficacy, are adapted to draw forth, develop, and form out of the living rudiments of immortal mind brought within its range, a character exemplifying the highest style of man. High scholarship and literary culture may exist in connection with a very perverted moral character, and the possession of the former can in no sense atone for the latter.

There is a peculiar spirit belonging to every Institution, the product of the dominant influence of men and of modes, the conditions, habitudes, and customs of the place, the combination in short of all the elements which affect the growth of mind and heart. It is of the highest importance that this spirit should be of the right kind. Students in general will leave the Institution with its imprimatur deeply impressed upon them. Princely endowments of millions, the ablest and most accomplished instructors, and all auxiliary resources which can be made available for the efficiency of the fullest educational apparatus, will all fail if there be a failure in the grand product of men formed under those influences. If they have received an impress of the wrong kind and an impulse in the wrong direction, from the combined result of the intellectual and moral influences which have surrounded them as the air they breathe, there is no remedy. The teachers may not always be responsible for this result, though they cannot be excused altogether. There are many agencies besides direct instruction which enter into the formation of a student's character. That Institution is to be preferred, though wanting in the fullest means for intellectual culture, in which these agencies are of the most healthful kind to the moral and religious nature, and to the general disposition and tone of the whole man.

But it should be taken note of in this connection that while the student cannot, in the nature of things, resist the effect of surrounding influences and the pervading spirit of what is classically termed the "genius loci" of the Institution, if he would be a man at all, he must do the greater part of the work of his own education. We hear of self-taught men in distinction from those taught in the schools. There are no men not self-taught. It requires the same individual effort to become truly educated in the school as by one's self; the simple difference is in the superior helps furnished in the school. Now it is characteristic of the Hamilton student to work out his own education. He is taught to educate himself under the favorable influences that surround him. There is more of self-education and mutual education among the students of Madison University and of the Theological Seminary, I dare to say, than in any other Institution of like kind and compass.

THE DETAILED HISTORY.

PREHISTORIC FACTS.—ORIGIN.

An Institution with such a beginning, so feeble in outward appearance, and with such a growth and such fruitage during its brief existence (counting by the ages of institutions) with such present strength and amplitude, and such elements of promise of unlimited expansion in the future, must surely have a history of extraordinary interest, embracing the evolutions of a great life blending heaven and earth. A little fountain at first, the course of whose tiny rivulet might be changed by the finger of a child, now a broad, deep and majestic river pouring its mighty volume into the ocean with a fulness of power that is felt far and wide through the billowy main. A spark that a breath might extinguish, now a great light that sends its illuminations and warmth around the world. This is the ordinary course of the Divine working, alike in the kingdoms of nature and of grace. The germ that may be held on the point of a needle becomes the monarch of the forest. The least of all seeds grows into a tree on whose branches the birds of the air make their nest and their home. A handful of corn in the earth on the top of a mountain springs up into a wide waving harvest that shakes like the cedar forests of Lebanon tossed by mountain tempests. The kingdom of God destined to absorb the kingdoms of the world was once comprised in the helpless infant in the manger-cradle of Bethlehem,—the church, in a small group of fearful saints in an upper room.

Of the multitudinous facts which I have collected together for this discourse, I can only cull one here and there of special significance, and hold it up to throw its light onward and indicate the track of historic progress. The facts connected with the origin and early history of the Institution have been recorded with considerable minuteness by different pens, and are probably known to most of the alumni. But there are some events prehistoric in time which, though having no visible connection with the written history, are yet worthy of a passing reference, as having a real and important bearing upon the subsequent developments. As early as the year 1794, Deacon Samuel Payne and Elisha his brother settled in the valley below. They were godly men, and Baptists. They were soon joined by the Olmsteads, Pierces, Osgoods, and others of like spirit and religious persuasion. Together they founded, in 1796, the First Baptist church of Hamilton, then known as "Payne's Settlement." The farm of Deacon Payne is now this fair domain spreading in such surpassing beauty on every side, the Baptist Education Society having been made his sole heir. A most interesting incident is authentically related of Deacon Payne, on felling the first tree in the virgin forest on this very spot, it is said, where the structures of the Institution rest. When the tree had fallen he kneeled down by its trunk and consecrated himself and all that he possessed to God. He prayed especially that God would be pleased to grant him in this wilderness a people and a church to worship him in spirit and in truth. All that he was, and all that he had, should henceforth be wholly the Lord's. In this solemn act of consecration alone in the solitude of the wild woods, may we not discern not only a personal consecration of a good man, but a prophecy as well? God answered that prayer, and accepted the offering; and how answered and accepted? Bethink you of this noble Institution resting as is affirmed upon the very spot where the consecration was made. Bethink you of all that the Institution, taking up into its life the sacredness of the very soil sanctified by the consecrating act, has accomplished and is yet to accomplish, and see how God in the plenitude of his boundless grace answers openly the secret prayer of his devoted servant. Another preliminary fact is worthy of note here. It is that in the providence of God a cluster of men of unusual mark was found among the early settlers of Hamilton, and the region round about. They belonged to a preëminently godly race, men of faith and prayer, earnest Bible students, and so "wise in the things of the kingdom." Though few of them were men of literary culture, yet their strong native sense, informed, imbued, and illumined with the knowledge of God's Word and Spirit, gave them large conceptions and prophetic forecast of the signs of coming times, and of things to be accomplished in advance to meet the increasing demands of the spreading kingdom of the Redeemer which by faith they saw in the distance. Hamilton, through these men and their coadjutors at that early day, became the radiating centre of wide-spreading, beneficent and permanent influences. The "Hamilton Baptist Missionary Society" was formed in the year 1807, at first named the "Lake Baptist Missionary Society," but subsequently chartered under the former name. This society engaged the best men, of the best preaching talent in all Central New York, and we may add of the whole State, to perform tours of missionary labor in the destitute regions of the West, all along the frontiers of the rapidly settling country, and among the Aborigines. We need name only such men and powerful preachers as Bennet, Peck, Lawton, Hosmer, Root, and Morton. Some of these men penetrated westward far beyond the limits of the State. The writer well recollects, when a little boy living in a log-house in the interior of Ohio, the visit and the preaching of the venerable Lawton, then a missionary of the Hamilton Society. This society expanded into the "New York Baptist State Convention," which has done so much for the spread of the gospel in destitute portions of the State, and for the general advancement of the denomination, and is still full of vigor and good works. Again, the society had an organ called the "Vehicle" edited by Daniel Hascall, John Peck, and John Lawton. Afterward it took the more imposing and distinctive name of "Western Baptist Magazine," and was ultimately merged in the "New York Baptist Register" and transferred to Utica, with Bro. Alexander M. Beebee as editor, and became the great organ not only of the Convention, but of the Baptist denomination of the State, and the most staunch and most efficient advocate of the interests of the Hamilton Institution. Mark the character, extent, and permanence of the influences of which Hamilton was the centre before an Institution of learning for the education of Baptist ministers was thought of. How appropriate that such men should comprehend and appreciate the wants of the rising ministry of the denomination. They were adequate to conceive, project, and put into operation great enterprises for the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

In whose mind of all these men first emerged the idea of an Institution for the education of the Baptist ministry, cannot now be definitely ascertained. It is certain that, as early as the year 1816, Daniel Hascall suggested the idea of a Literary and Theological Institution in Central New York to Nathaniel Kendrick, who visited Hamilton in that year, and in the next became pastor of the Baptist Church in Eaton Village. Prof. Hascall himself told me that the idea of such an institution first rose in his mind, while reading a circular letter of Dr. Jeremiah Chaplin before an Association in Massachusetts. If this be so, how fitting in the providence of God that this venerable man (Dr. Chaplin) should spend his last days at Hamilton (where Thos. J. Conant, his son-in-law, was an honored professor in the Institution), and his body be laid to rest in yonder cemetery that overlooks the Institution of which he furnished the original idea. But it is not improbable that the thought might have simultaneously and independently risen in several minds of kindred mould and spirit. It is often so in regard to the birth of a great enterprise. The idea comes up in different minds independently, and is pondered separately, each one fearful of speaking out, lest the imputation of a visionary be incurred, until some incident brings to light what is common, and all are prepared to act together in realizing the common conception, like as subterranean rivulets meandering apart and unperceived flow together and come to the surface in a gushing spring of crystal water, destined to become a mighty stream to refresh and fertilize a wide region. Seven brethren of like thought came together in the north room of Deacon Payne's house, (the same now occupied by Esquire Simons on the corner below) in the month of May, 1817, to converse and pray over the subject of the want of a more enlightened ministry. This meeting led to another (called by a circular issued by the seven) on the 24th of the following September. Thirteen brethren answered the summons, six being added to the original seven.

They met in an east room of Deacon Olmstead's house south of the Boarding Hall, and now occupied by Mr. Ball, and then and there, after prayer and consultation, they formed themselves into a society named "The Baptist Education Society of the State of New York," with a constitution, the preamble of which runs thus: "Impressed with the vast importance of the Christian ministry as connected with the conversion of sinners and the edification of the church, and desirous to furnish to young men of piety and gifts the means of acquiring an education with a view to their public usefulness, we do hereby associate, and adopt the following constitution." The characteristic article of the constitution is as follows: "The object of this Society shall be to afford means of instruction to such persons of the Baptist denomination as shall furnish evidence to the churches of which they are members, and to the Executive Committee hereafter named, of their personal piety and call to the ministry." A subsequent article requires that all the members of the Board of Trustees and of the Executive Committee and other officers shall be members in good standing in some Baptist church. After completing their organization, and each paying one dollar, the money consideration of membership, they kneeled down together and with one heart besought the Lord in humble submission to his will to accept and bless their work and carry it on for his own glory. The Lord did answer and accept while they were yet speaking, and they rose from their knees with a loving union of hearts, smiling through their tears from a blessed assurance alike in each one's deepest consciousness, that the Lord had condescended to hear and to own and to bless. Thus was the germ started into life whose mighty growth we are here to rejoice and glory in to-day. It is interesting to notice here that the spirit of prayer, faith, and dependence on the blessing of God in which the enterprise was commenced was carried through all the subsequent efforts of these pious men to build it up. I have been deeply affected in reading the successive reports of the Board and Executive Committee and agents, by the strength and fervor of their expressions in acknowledging the divine favor on the work of their hands, in recognizing their solemn responsibilities, their personal unworthiness, and their insufficiency of themselves to accomplish anything worthy of the sacred cause without God's help and guidance. From the beginning onward this spirit breathes through all their communications. They profoundly felt the sacredness of the mission to which they were committed.

* Of these, Robert Powell, now living in the State of Michigan, is the sole survivor. He was providentially present at the Jubilee, having come all the way from his distant home for the special purpose, though the frosts of eighty winters had made his yet full locks "a crown of glory." At this point in the discourse, the speaker turned toward Father Powell, who was sitting conspicuously on his right, and addressed him in a few appropriate remarks.

Some remarks in this connection on the special object and scope of this Society will be pertinent. I. It had one object only and exclusively—namely, to furnish means for the education of young men who shall give evidence of a call to the ministry. II. As the most efficient means to accomplish this object, it contemplated at the outset the establishment of an Institution of learning to be subject to its control. Such an Institution was embosomed and distinctly recognized in its organic law. In this respect, it differed from all other educational societies existing at that time or since, except those modelled after this peculiarity. Its provisions did not look, as did those of other societies, to the education of its beneficiaries at any Institution they might choose to attend, but exclusively to the Institution to be created under its own auspices. The Society therefore cannot be detached from and exist apart and independently of the Institution for the education of students for the Baptist ministry established by itself. Let this peculiarity be kept in view. The life of the Society is bound up in that of the Institution. Through all the changes and modifications of this educational enterprise the relation of the Society to its original purpose has been sought to be preserved in all its integrity. Any material change in this respect strikes at its very life. III. The education designed for students of the ministry was designed to include not only a thorough theological education, but also a full literary and scientific course of training and culture. We shall see how faithfully this purpose has been adhered to.

The Society began its work by sending out broadcast printed copies of its constitution and address to the denomination. I have read this first address of the Society, followed by one from the Executive Committee of like tenor, with the liveliest admiration. The author's name is not given, but the address itself would do honor to the most honored names in the denomination of to-day. The comprehensive, just and pertinent views set forth are quite up to the present demands, and so were considerably in advance of the prevalent sentiment of the Baptists of that period, not only in regard to the importance of an educated ministry, but also of an Institution expressly for their education. It is not historically true that Baptists were ever opposed to an educated ministry, and were not thankful to God if he were pleased to choose a man of learning, as he did Paul, to preach his gospel and explain the word of eternal life. But an Institution for the special purpose of educating ministers, many good and influential brethren when the Society was formed considered as a human device, and to be regarded with suspicion, as if dispensing with the necessity of the gifts of grace, and so likely to inflict upon the churches the curse of a coldly intellectual and graceless ministry. A public sentiment had to be created in favor of the infant Institution, nor did explanations, arguments and protests prove sufficient to remove the serious obstacle. It was not until the rich fruits of the school were experienced by the churches in the godly preaching and earnest and successful labors in the winning of souls to Christ, of those educated in it, that the honest and conscientious objections gave way, and opposers were converted into its warmest friends. This was the case of that noble-hearted Christian and powerful preacher, Alfred Bennett. He held himself aloof from the early efforts of the founders until he saw the precious fruits in the "living epistles, known and read," among the churches and people. There were other good men of the same class. They frankly confessed their mistake and labored more abundantly to advance the interests of the enterprise because of their mistaken fears and opposition at the beginning. The report of the Executive Committee at the first annual meeting contains three noteworthy records: I. "On the 12th of February, 1818, they convened for the examination of Bro. Jonathan Wade, who exhibited a letter of his membership and liberty to preach from the Baptist Church in Hartford, Washington Co., N. Y. After examination he was received to the privileges of the Institution." (Mark the language. As yet there was no Institution visible. Its idea, soon to be realized, was an elementary and essential one in the plan of operation.) "Since this time he has been studying under the instruction of Elder Hascall." II. A vote to apply to the Legislature at its next session for an act of incorporation under the name of the "Baptist Education Society of the State of New-York." The charter was subsequently obtained, March 5th, 1819. III. The appointment of a "committee of seven to make inquiries and report at the next annual meeting on the situation which they may think most proper for a site for locating permanently the Institution." This committee was constituted from a wide extent of country, Sangerfield, Westmoreland, Norwich, Schuyler, Camillus, Franklin and Hamilton— one member from Hamilton— Elisha Payne—a proof that local partiality had no influence in this important measure. This committee took for some reason no decided action, and at the next meeting the appointment of a new committee was referred to the Board (two only of the ten being from Hamilton, Elisha Payne and Jonathan Olmstead), with directions to give the committee full power for determining the site. This committee reported to the Board, and, at a second meeting held at Peterboro on the 3d of November, 1819, decided in favor of Hamilton in preference to several other competitors, on the condition that six thousand dollars should be paid to the Society in a specified mode. The condition and mode were accepted and the securities given. These were perfectly fulfilled by the people of Hamilton one year before the time named, leaving a balance in favor of the covenantees of thirty-two dollars, seventy-two cents. The report of the final adjustment as to permanent location is signed by Alfred Bennett, Seneca B. Burchard, and Charles Randall. The pecuniary condition is fully equal to sixty thousand dollars at the present time, an amount, it would seem, amply sufficient to secure the permanent location, beyond all fear of removal, of an Institution of the highest grade at any locality.

On the first of May, 1820, the school was formally opened in the third story of the brick building already mentioned, the first story being occupied by the district school, and the second by the Hamilton Academy under the charge of Prof. Zenas Morse. Under the conviction that much depended on the judicious choice of a teacher, the Executive Committee in their report say: "They sought counsel from abroad, and the direction of Providence, and not having succeeded in obtaining a permanent teacher, they have opened the school under the instruction of Prof. Hascall, whose services thus far have been acceptable." This was the visible commencement of the "Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution," though virtually, as we have seen, it had its beginning with the Society, but hitherto without "a local habitation and a name." Some half dozen students were in attendance at the opening, among whom were brethren Wade and Kincaid. These and others of the early students were taught partly by Prof. Hascall, and partly by Prof. Morse, in charge of the Hamilton Academy in the room below. Prof. Morse's co-operation in giving instruction was of special value.

In a general survey of the progress of the Institution onward from this beginning we may recognize three distinct eras: The first closing with 1839, when other than students for the ministry were admitted to its literary and scientific privileges; the second closing with the year 1846, when the charter of Madison University was made available to the literary and scientific department, and the provisions for instruction and the support of instructors committed to its Board under certain restrictions, reserving the control of theological instruction to the Board of the Society, and securing the usual accommodations to its beneficiaries and to all students for the ministry; the third, the subsequent history of the University and the Theological Seminary, now two institutions in law and in reality, but connected by intimate social bonds and a substantial moral unity, to the present time. In order to comprise the chief events of these several epochs in as brief and intelligible a presentation as possible, I shall not follow strictly the chronological order, or go much into minute details. I propose to group facts under several distinct heads, as: I. A general history proper. II. Principal human agencies employed. III. Some of the special providences intervening in the course of events.

Through the first epoch, namely, from the beginning to the year 1839, the original idea, pure and simple, was strictly adhered to—i. e., the Institution was purely a ministerial school, admitting only those professedly looking forward to the Christian ministry, and formally approved by their respective churches as such. In addition, each student before admission was examined and approved, at first by the Executive Committee, and, according to a subsequent arrangement, by the Faculty, as to his Christian experience and call to the ministry. These conditions served to soften objections to the Institution as an enterprise, as was alleged, designed to "make ministers," and greatly relieved from a grave responsibility its directors and instructors—the chief responsibility being thus thrown upon the churches in recommending their own members, whom they must personally know to the privileges of the school, and the examiners of the Committee and of the Faculty simply requiring for themselves evidences of an actual call to the ministry, as attested by the churches. If they could not on a thorough examination obtain such evidence they reserved the right to send them back to their churches for reconsideration. Here was a double guard against unworthy applicants. The Institution could not be justly charged with making ministers, as it received to its privileges only such as came with authenticated credentials from the churches that they were approved and accepted of God for the work of the ministry, and were passed under an initiatory examination by the Faculty. The Board were earnest in their Reports in pressing upon the attention of the churches the importance of great caution in recommending young brethren to the Faculty for proper ministerial training.

Students soon began to come in from the churches in numbers quite beyond all expectation, and that "third story" became too strait for their reception. A large building was a necessity. This was completed and occupied in 1823 under the superintendence of Prof. Hascall, and was one of the conditions of permanent location. The building is now known as the "Old Stone Academy," on the plain, being used for many years after the "school of the prophets" vacated it for the male department of the Hamilton Academy, which flourished vigorously so long under the principalship of Prof. Zenas Morse, the lamented Munro Weed (his son-in-law,) and Profs. Osborn and Buell. The new edifice was soon filled to overflowing, and another and larger was demanded. Deacon Samuel Payne had made over his farm March 11th, 1826, to the Society, and here the new building was erected as the permanent home of the "school of the prophets." It is named the "Middle or Western Edifice." Its construction, as the former, was intrusted to Prof. Hascall. This was a grand advance in the material progress of the enterprise, and the opening and dedication of the new edifice on Tuesday preceding the anniversary of 1827 was a great day of rejoicing and spiritual edification to its friends. Dr. Stephen Gano, of Providence, R. I., preached the dedicatory sermon, and was followed by Prof. Hascall, who delivered an address embracing a review of the providence of God which had conducted the Institution to its present elevation. "The singing," it is recorded, "was conducted by Bro. Eli Buell, in superior style, and the whole performance appeared to partake of that life and spirit of the Gospel which are grateful to the devotions of the humble and reflect honor upon the God of grace. There appeared an unction from the Holy One which rendered the whole transaction in the highest degree interesting, and many could say 'it is good to be here.'" The day following was the "Commencement" held in the new chapel. Nine students graduated, most of them subsequently distinguished in the ministry. In this number I notice the name of Jabez Swan, whose praise for years was in so many churches. The audience was estimated in number at two thousand. The editor of the Baptist Register in the issue of June 16th, 1827, notices in very complimentary terms the exercises of the occasion. He remarks that "The exhibition held an equal footing with that of any Institution with which he was acquainted (the editor was a graduate of Columbia College in N. Y. City, and a man of accomplished culture), the enunciation of the speakers being distinct, manly, and remarkably free from the nasal twang of the east and from the disgusting imitations of theatrical rant and mouthing, the gesticulation easy and natural, and sufficiently liberal without excessive action." Hamilton students have always been distinguished as a body for this sort of elocution, and this description equally applies to-day as forty years ago. At the same time with the erection of the Western Edifice a commodious Boarding Hall was built in the immediate vicinity and provided with the necessary arrangements and appurtenances. The spirit of progress has swept this building away, and this noble edifice called the "Hall of Alumni and Friends" which we are now occupying stands in its place. The present Boarding Hall is at a more healthy distance, requiring no little bodily exercise to go to and return from it. It was erected in 1838 under the superintendence of Bro. James Edmunds, who as agent and steward of the Society rendered the most valuable and efficient service. He was a man of remarkable energy, sagacity, and good judgment. The steady increase of students requiring another building, in 1833 the "Eastern Edifice" of nearly the same dimensions as the Western, 100 by 60 ft., and four stories high, was built under the superintendence of Deacon Seneca B. Burchard, the funds for the purpose being collected mostly by elder Elon Galusha (long known to the denomination for his eloquence in the pulpit and activity in all Christian work) without drawing upon the current expenses. The edifice was completed six months before the time specified in the contract and for two thousand dollars less than the original estimates. The rooms for students in these ample edifices were furnished by the churches or by benevolent individuals, the good sisters taking a chief part in this necessary work. Every article suited to the convenience and comfort of the occupants was put into the rooms without expense to the student or the Society.

Thus far, the material progress of the school during the first period under review. The intellectual progress was not less steadily onward. At first the course was three years mostly in theological study, providing for a longer stay according to the wishes of the student. The demand of the students for more extensive and thorough instruction (their intellectual appetite "growing by what it fed on") continued to rise, and in 1829 the course was extended to four years, in 1832 to six, and in 1834 to eight years (as it has remained since) for the whole period of ministerial study, including classical and theological. This course was divided into three distinct departments, Academic, Collegiate and Theological, designed as a whole to furnish as complete an education, literary and theological, as is usually acquired in academies, colleges, and theological seminaries separately, and saving one year of time. The studies of the departments were so adjusted that in eight years as much was accomplished as elsewhere in nine, and the whole being more continuous and harmonious. Thus in fourteen years after the opening of the school it had expanded into an academy, college, and theological seminary, each of the first class, and the best education from beginning to end was furnished to candidates for the ministry. To carry out this progressive arrangement able teachers of superior qualifications were from time to time appointed as the exigencies demanded. In 1821 Prof. Hascall, who had been instructing students from the beginning, was formally appointed Professor of Ancient Languages, and Dr. N. Kendrick, Professor of Theology. In 1823 Beriah N. Leach and Chancellor Hartshorn were appointed tutors for a specified time. In 1828 Seth S. Whitman, an alumnus, and also a graduate from Newton Theological Seminary, was elected Professor of Biblical Interpretation and Criticism, and in 1829, Barnas Sears, (venerabile nomen) in the loss of Daniel H. Barnes, by his sudden and tragic death, who had accepted the appointment, was elected Professor of the Ancient Languages, Prof. Hascall having been transferred to the chair of Natural Philosophy, with that of Sacred Rhetoric, and the chair of Mental Philosophy added to that of Theology under Dr. Kendrick. In 1831, Joel S. Bacon, recently called to the Presidency of Georgetown College, Ky., was called to the chair of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, but declined at the time to enter upon the duties of the former position. In 1833, after a presidency of two years at Georgetown, on the renewal of the call to Hamilton, he accepted and acceded to the chair in the spring of that year. He was subsequently transferred to the chair of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy. In 1832, Asahel C. Kendrick, a graduate of Hamilton College, on the transfer of Prof. Sears to the chair of Biblical Theology (Dr. Kendrick still holding that of Systematic Theology) was appointed Prof. Sears' successor in the chair of Languages. The next year, 1833, George W. Eaton, an alumnus of Union College, who had spent two years as Professor of Languages in Georgetown College, the last six months of which he was its acting President, was chosen to the chair of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. In 1834, Stephen W. Taylor, an alumnus of Hamilton College, and for years the principal of one of the first academies in the State, was chosen principal of the academic department with the title and equal position of professor in the collegiate department. Thus we see that as early as 1834 there was a complete course of Literary and Theological study, and seven professors. The literary character of the Institution was up to an equal standing with the best colleges, and the attainments and culture of the alumni would not suffer in comparison with those of any of these Institutions. Before the close of the period under consideration some other changes are worthy of note. In 1835, Prof. Whitman* resigned the chair of Biblical Interpretation and Criticism, and Thos. J. Conant (illustre nomen) was chosen his successor. Dr. Sears, on his accession to the chair of Biblical Theology in 1833, left for Germany, where he spent two years in the great universities in that country. In consequence of the extension of the course there was no class in his department, and he could leave without detriment to the interests of his chair. He returned in 1835 laden with the richest lore of that classic land, but alas for us, he was coveted by a sister Institution and taken from us. No man ever connected with the Faculty was more admired and loved, and on whom higher hopes were reposed than Prof. Sears. He was the pride and glory of the Institution in its intellectual and literary character, to which his short connection had most powerfully contributed. Immediate measures were taken to fill the vacancy. Dr. Williams was at once appointed, but would not consent to leave the pastorate; then Dr. Crawley, of Nova Scotia, President of Acadia College, was elected, and Prof. Conant despatched in midwinter all the way to his distant home to secure him. He visited the Institution and expressed himself greatly pleased with its character, condition, and prospects, and gave hope of his acceptance, but was finally prevailed upon by his friends at home to remain in his position. Dr. Hackett, then of Brown University, was next elected, and he too, on visiting the Institution, expressed his gratification with its state and prospects, but was also prevented from coming by opposing influences. It was not until the year 1838 that the vacancy was filled by the choice of Rev. John S. Maginnis. Students immediately rallied to his instructions, and the full tide of prosperity in all the departments flowed on as if nothing of a disastrous nature had occurred. In the same year, 1838, John F. Richardson, a graduate of the Institution, was appointed to the chair of Latin, leaving Greek exclusively to Prof. Kendrick.

* Prof. Whitman occupied the chair seven years. He was a fine scholar and a most amiable Christian gentleman. He removed with his family to Belvidere.

During all this period, the Institution was sustained by contributions from the churches and benevolent individuals, and mainly through the energetic efforts of agents with the unsolicited aid from generous patrons who had learned to appreciate its value. It had no endowment, and had consequently to ask continually for its daily bread, and the prayer was often answered in a remarkable manner, in Illinois, and for years exerted a conspicuous influence in the movements of the denomination in that State, and died esteemed and loved by all who kne

though at times great embarrassment was experienced. While the current expenses amounted to a few thousand dollars per annum, we find from the reports that the Society kept out of debt, but that when, from the patronage extended to the increasing number of students needing it, and other drafts, the expenses annually ran up to twelve or fifteen thousand dollars, the Board found themselves not unfrequently in painful arrears, and extraordinary measures had to be adopted to replenish an exhausted treasury, and carry on the ever-growing burden of accumulating responsibilities. But they never faltered. Trusting in God, they found ever "strength equal to their day."

It would leave a hiatus in the history of the period now passing in review if all reference to the personal labors of the students in the material progress of the Institution was omitted. They rendered the most efficient aid in various ways to Prof. Hascall and others in the erection of the material structures and in the general improvement of the premises. Look abroad over this beautiful hill, and consider how much of human labor must have been expended in making it what it is. The greater part is due to the labor of students! Their memorial is imbedded in the soil and lives in the clusters and rows of beautiful trees which adorn the scene. The greater part of this useful ornamentation was done gratuitously by the Students' Association—the students cheerfully taking their accustomed exercise in this kind of occupation. A system of manual labor was instituted by the Board during a portion of this period by which students could pay their way in whole or in part in agricultural or mechanical employment. The Payne farm furnished convenient scope for the former, and shops were erected for the latter. Much work was done on this plan, but in the progress of affairs it went into desuetude as in most other places. Without depreciating in any sense the power and efficiency of the alumni of later times, the Institution through its first, second, and third decades sent out a body of men of rare practical energy, tact, and earnest devotion to the Master, who have exerted an influence at home and abroad, in the pulpit, pastorate, and personal contact with their fellow-men—in the councils, movements, and progress of the denomination in all its departments of benevolent and evangelizing work, and in lands of heathen darkness, where they have indeed been as "lights shining in a dark place"—an influence for the highest good of which no created mind can form an adequate conception. Merciful God, may the spirit of these men abide with their successors, who have enjoyed and are enjoying superior literary advantages, but who, without that spirit, will be weak as water "in the things of the Kingdom."

In the year 1839 the doors of the Institution were opened to students of good moral character not having the ministry in view. A new element was thereby introduced, not immediately producing any perceptible change, but fraught with grave consequences in the future progress of affairs. The original idea of a purely ministerial school had up to this point been adhered to with singular tenacity. A project was started at an early period in its progress to found, in connection with the Institution proper, a preparatory school for pious students, including others than those professedly studying for the ministry. This project was entertained with much interest by some of the most earnest friends at Hamilton, as adapted to furnish helps to the central element of the school, and draw into the ministry a younger class of students already partly trained; but before anything was committed, the brethren in the City of New York were consulted, as they were generally in all cases of more than ordinary importance. After prayerful consideration (in those days prayer was mixed with everything), the measure was deemed by them inexpedient, and it was dropped. They were of opinion that the Institution should not even in appearance swerve from its primitive design. Although there were occasionally students connected with the families of the professors and other officers pursuing studies with the classes, even these were not recognized as members of the school, and were excluded from the catalogue and from graduation. My own brother, who was strongly inclined to the ministry, but not ready to avow his purpose, was not permitted formally to graduate with his class, though confessedly among the first in scholarship. It was the same with a brother of Dr. Asahel C. Kendrick, now the Rev. John Ryland Kendrick, D. D. Both of them subsequently became distinguished preachers. The former died in his prime, while President of the Union University, Tennessee. The latter still adorns the sacred profession as the popular and beloved pastor of the Tabernacle Church in the City of New York. I mention these things to indicate the strength and tenacity with which the purely ministerial idea was held. However, as a full collegiate course was established affording a liberal, classical and scientific education, the question began to be agitated among the patrons of the Institution, whether the privileges of this department might not, without jeopardy to the sacred object, be extended to those not having the ministry in view. The Rev. Dr. Backus, who was about this time performing an important agency for the Society, reported that he found a wide-spread and increasing feeling on this subject among the friends of the Society. Those having sons to educate and desirous to place them under healthy moral and religious influences, inquired with deep solicitude, whether an arrangement was not possible whereby their sons, though not designed for the ministry, might enjoy the privileges and superior instruction of the Collegiate Department. The discussion could not be evaded or postponed, and it came before the Board in the form of the following resolution: "Resolved, That the great object at which this Society is aiming will be promoted by allowing the Faculty, for the time being, to receive into the Collegiate Department of the Institution a limited number of young men who have not the ministry in view." Mark the caution in the wording of the resolution. Notwithstanding the caution, Dr. Kendrick opposed the resolution with all the vigor of his powerful intellect, and the fervor of his great soul. He deemed it an entering wedge to a change in the object and character of the Institution, portending the most serious consequences. His colleagues took the other side with several members of the Board, and the resolution was finally passed—the remarkable man exemplifying in this case, as in all others of difference of opinion and policy, the noble characteristic of yielding gracefully to defeat, and never flagging in his zeal and labor for the cause whose course he could not control. In deference to his views, the new measure was severely qualified by providing—1st. That none of the class to be admitted should be received without satisfactory evidence of possessing a good moral character. 2d. The payment of bills must be made in advance, without any remission of charge for privileges free to ministerial students. 3d. That the income so accruing should go to the support of the latter. 4th. That the number should in no case exceed that of students for the ministry. 5th. That no change should be made in the course of study, nor any class formed except with the direct and exclusive design of promoting the one great object for which the Institution was established; and 6th. That in no way should the accommodations and conveniences of students for the ministry be abridged or infringed on. The measure was thus hedged round, it would seem, by every restriction demanded by the most scrupulous advocate of the old regime. Students of the new order began to come in and take their places in the regular classes. Many of these afterward gave themselves to the ministry, and still continue to do so. Now that the Institution was doing an important work for general education, besides its peculiar mission, the question arose why it might not share in the patronage of the State. Application was made to the Legislature for an appropriation, but was rejected on the ground that the Institution had no recognized relation to the State, not being a chartered college, though having a full and organized college course. This fact, in connection with the desire of the students taking the college course for the usual recognition, by way of regular diplomas of the prescribed degree, induced an application for a college charter. This was first made in 1840, and failed. The desire of college graduates for the ordinary degrees was met, for the time, by an arrangement with Columbian College, in the District of Columbia, which generously admitted Hamilton graduates from the collegiate course (whose competency was certified by the Faculty) to an equal footing with their own. We owe a debt of gratitude to that noble college for the favor and courtesy thus shown, which I am happy on this occasion to record and commemorate. In 1843 a second application was made for a college charter. This also failed, as it was alleged, for the want of a proper body to receive the charter.

The Education Society, being a popular organization, spread over the State, was not such a body, and its Board, being annually elective, was equally incompetent. There appeared to be no other way than to constitute an entirely new body, and that too a close corporation, to receive the charter, and come into the same relation to the State as other chartered corporations for literary purposes. On such a basis, the corporation being named and organized into an independent close corporation under the title of "Madison University," the application was renewed and granted, March 26, 1846. This was altogether a unique proceeding. The Board of the Education Society, having charge of an Institution expanded to the largest scope for literary and scientific acquisitions, apply to the State to create an independent corporation, invested with the amplest college powers, with a prospective but direct view of making it available in some way to their existing Institution, and not for the creation of a new one. Undoubtedly the University Corporators might legally establish an independent Institution under the provisions of their charter, but their action was to be directed and guarded by two specific regulations inserted in the body of the document. 1st. The seat of the University was to be located permanently at Hamilton. 2d. The Baptist Education Society was authorized by a separate article to make such arrangements with the University for the transfer of the property of said Society or any part thereof, either absolutely or conditionally, to the said University as the said Society shall deem proper. A further guard was provided in the fact that in naming the corporators a majority were also members of the Board of the Education Society, and it was in the power of the Society forever to secure this proportion.

Thus guarded, the charter came before the Board of the Society, and after much earnest discussion as to the particular method of making it available to their existing Institution (some good brethren seeing so much difficulty in the business, and entertaining such fears of its disturbing influence on the character and operations of the Institution, as to suggest that it had better be returned to the Legislature), it was resolved finally by the Board, and the resolution subsequently ratified by the Society, that an arrangement should be made with the Board of the University, whereby their charter should be made available to the Literary Department of the "Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution," leaving out the Theological Department. A small minority advocated the extension of the charter over the latter, but this was at once met by a most emphatic and uncompromising resistance by an overwhelming majority, who took the ground that theological education must not be subjected in any wise to the supervision of the State or a purely secular corporation, but kept strictly and exclusively under the control of the "Baptist Education Society," the proper organ of the denomination in the education of its ministry. But how was it possible under this arrangement to preserve in its integrity the original object of the Institution?

This vital point was secured in the "Terms of Compact" between the Education Society and the Board of the University, one condition of which is that the University should ever sustain a course of secular education adapted to the proper training of the ministry, and another that the control of theological education proper should be reserved exclusively to the Board of the Society, and third, that in default of fulfilling these conditions, the University Board was subjected "to a notice to quit" within two years. Henceforth, theoretically and in law, there were two Institutions in Hamilton, a University and a Theological Seminary, as at the present time. The "terms of compact" provided by other arrangements for concurrent and harmonious action between the two bodies which have been happily carried out thus far. While doing a great work for secular education, the University Board have been faithful to the compact and maintained, extended, and enforced a system eminently adapted to meet the highest demands of the ministerial student. It is no degradation for the University thus to act as handmaid to the Education Society. The education of the ministry is the sanctifying and saving element in the whole scheme and scope of their functions and operations. It is also the unifying element in the entire system of educational training. The sacred object of the original founders, if kept in view, will secure and consecrate a substantial moral unity between all departments of our educational system at Hamilton.

HISTORY OF THE "REMOVAL CONTROVERSY."

The University, thus bound by a solemn marriage to the Education Society, had not advanced in its career but little more than one year, when an extraordinary crisis was precipitated by what is historically known as the Removal Controversy. I am not without a feeling of perplexity and misgiving in approaching this portion of the history of our beloved Institution. I have no disposition whatever to rake over the cold ashes of a spent conflagration now happily incrustated over and covered by a luxuriant growth of beautiful verdure of richest promise, and thereby, it may be, to hurt the growth and bring to the upper air slumbering sparks of the old fire, to be rekindled by the contact, and scorch anew hearts healed and cicatrized by time and gracious providences. There are bitter memories often associated with exceptional crises in human affairs, which, when buried, should never be evoked from their tomb and galvanized into seeming ghastly life. I am restrained from using the present opportunity for such a purpose, not only by my own feelings long since discharged of every unkindly element, but by considerations of the most propitious nature connected with the results of the unhappy conflict. Both parties are now, I believe, of one mind in a thankful acceptance of these results. We can, together, render thanks to God for the exercise of his peculiar prerogative in this matter of bringing good out of evil, and in "making the wrath of man to praise him and restraining the remainder." There are now two Institutions instead of one, each stronger and far richer in resources than the one around which the conflict raged, their localities sufficiently far apart, and their characters so distinctly marked by their own peculiarities, as not necessarily to interfere with each other's appropriate sphere. There is a feeling of amity and good will between the two, and the friends of each are on the best terms mutually, and exchange hearty congratulations on the success of their favorite enterprises. I see before me now, while I am speaking, alumni and friends who took different sides in that memorable controversy, sitting together with hearts beating in unison with the same love to the old Institution, and with their hands alike open to supply all its needs. Some of the most honored brethren earnestly committed to "removal," have since rendered very valuable personal services as preachers, orators, patrons and liberal benefactors to the enterprise here. They have sent their sons hither to be educated, and in various ways have evinced their abiding and even augmented interest in the old Institution. How irrelevant and ungracious to utter harsh words to grate unpleasantly upon any heart which, though for a while under peculiar circumstances alienated from its old love, is here and now under the sound of my voice glowing with all the original fervor of its restored attachment. I shall intentionally do no such thing.

But, on the other hand, shall that portentous period be passed over without any special notice in the history of to-day? Shall a historical hiatus be left, which hides from view events and doings fraught with the deepest and strangest interest, and of abiding and far-reaching consequences to the character and career of the Institution far into coming time? There are points of profound significancy to be noted, principles involving vital elements of right and justice, and of true denominational policy in regard to educational interests, to be stated, from which lessons of great value may be drawn to be treasured up for future use. Above all, the movings of God's hand from time to time so marked in the course of the controversy demand a fitting record and memorial. The Removal Agitation has a history of stupendous interest to the friends of the Institution and to Baptists generally, on whichever side they may be ranged. It shook the sacred structure to its granite foundations—it shattered it from turret to foundation-stone, and would have swept the falling wreck clean away from its consecrated ground, had not a mightier power than man's strengthened and upheld the feeble hands of devoted friends in a persistent resistance to the last. If man could have destroyed it, it would have been destroyed from the face of the earth. I verily believe that a more powerful array of human influences, energized by the strongest intellect, the most intense determination, and the most indomitable will, never was brought to bear upon any institution of man, and it notwithstanding bore up and emerged in triumph at last to the unbounded joy and gratitude of its friends, and to the disappointment and amazement of opponents and lookers-on. And how came it to pass that the old vessel outrode the storm, not one plank or beam removed, and only a part of the crew fled? It was because God took care of it. It seemed good to Him to permit the storm to rage and spend its utmost fury until the precious structure was reduced to a condition beyond human help, that he might in the extremity show his hand "mighty to save," and prove the faithfulness of his oft-repeated promises to its sainted founders that their prayers, labors and toils should not be in vain, and that no arm wielded for the destruction of their work should ultimately succeed. So we have seen that he ruled the tempest and directed the storm, stilled the winds and waves that had so long been beating against the filling and sinking ship, and brought her safely to land! "God was in the midst of her," and therefore, beloved alumni, your Alma Mater was neither removed nor destroyed.

And now in what I shall say in a brief sketch of the salient points of the "removal" history, my aim is twofold. First, to vindicate the motives and course of the opponents of removal, and second, and preëminently to commemorate the Divine interpositions in bringing the Institution safely through the terrible crisis. No one can justly blame the historian for so much as this, and the demand for an apology would be an impertinence. He has a right, and it is his solemn duty to speak on this day to these intents. But while claiming purity of motives on the part of the opponents of removal, he freely concedes the same to its advocates. Without hesitation he admits that both parties alike were animated by sincere and earnest convictions, and verily believed that they were acting for the best interests of the cause of education secular and sacred among Baptists. Both, however, could not be right, and it cannot be improper by a kind and candid statement of facts to indicate on which side was the right and on which the wrong. There may have been much of wrong-doing on both sides, but, back of the actions of the opposing parties, the radical and fundamental question must be considered in its inherent and intrinsic merits. It is taken for granted that the personal relation of the historian to the facts will almost of necessity, in the minds of some, impair the strict impartiality of his statements. He does not claim to be exempt from the common infirmities of the human mind. It is not easy for him to record certain facts, even at this day, without a glow of moral indignation. He claims however to be honest, and earnestly disposed to speak the pure and simple truth. He must speak from his own stand-point, and state matters as they really stand in his own view, setting down naught in malice. The historian of the other side would, no doubt, state matters differently, but as to facts I give them as they occurred. If I should broadly assert that the advocates of removal were wrong, I should find concurrence and confirmation strong and decided, in letters and oral deliverances from leading removalists confessing the fact. After it was all over and the smoke of the battle cleared away, and it was seen how God in his gracious providence was bringing good out of evil in shaping results, the strongest expressions were made to me by the most determined of the promoters of removal, that a great mistake had been made by them, not, of course, in establishing a new institution, of which they were proud and well might be, but in attempting, and persisting in the attempt, to remove the old. "I thank God," wrote one of the most sincere of removalists, and subsequently a member of the Rochester Board, "that your convictions were different from mine. I see now how entirely wrong was the whole scheme of removal." "We are convinced," said the gifted, impulsive and generous Wilder, in a personal interview with me a short time before he was stricken down by the hand of death, "that you were right in holding on to the old Institution, and I do sincerely rejoice in its rising prosperity. There is ample room for both." My memory gratefully recurs to this interview with this distinguished and ardent promoter of the removal enterprise, without whose early and energetic personal efforts and generous contributions, the enterprise must have expired in its birth-throes. We had long been estranged by the intense friction of our opposing views. That interview was a perfect reconciliation. The next I heard of John N. Wilder he had been suddenly stricken by death, in the prime and vigor of generous manhood. I never doubted his honesty, sincerity and disinterestedness in all that he did for removal and the interests of Rochester University. I prized his friendship and mourned its loss, and it is a source of mournful pleasure that we came together before "God took him." Another brother, very zealous in the early efforts at removal, said to me, "One of the greatest errors of my life was going into that pernicious humbug." I shall not be likely, therefore, to offend any considerable number of my removal brethren by speaking plainly of the nature and tendencies of the ill-starred enterprise. It is in place in this connection to state most explicitly that the friends of this location never opposed the founding of an Institution of Learning at Rochester in the interest of the denomination. This was the very thing they urged upon Removalists—namely, to abandon the unnatural, impracticable and disastrous efforts to remove the old, and to occupy the vacant field (as was alleged), by a wholly new institution. This they ultimately had to do, and years of the saddest conflict might have been saved by a timely occupancy of the open field without disturbing the "Old Landmarks." I must not therefore be understood as in the least reflecting upon the Rochester Institutions, Literary and Theological, in what I say of "Removal." They stand clear of any essential implication in the great commotion. They have indeed an eventual relation to it in their origin. They are in an important sense the consequent of the movement, but as distinct enterprises they do not necessarily share in the animus and range of removal measures. Among all those who are now connected with the Faculties of those flourishing institutions, only one (and he, it gives me pleasure to say, a star of conspicuous brilliancy in the firmament of Christian literature) took part in efforts for removal.

Having thus cleared the subject of offensive personalities, I shall deal with Removal impersonally on its merits, or rather demerits, and solely for the purpose named. It was a baleful meteor that hung for a while on the sky of this sacred enterprise, and flung from its train the pestilential elements of strife, distraction and desolation. I shall not spare it, though no individual person need feel himself hit or aimed at. I have no private griefs to avenge by "setting down aught in malice." I have none but the kindest feelings toward all my brethren engaged in the movement. I see nothing in the past of this matter but the retreating meteor growing "small by degrees and beautifully less." It has, however, left a history, the facts of which are too significant to be passed over. Let the facts speak. Whence originated the idea of removal? I mean no personal depreciation of any one when I assert that the origin was local and personal. The idea was born in a storm of personal indignation raised by an act of the Education Board in adjusting the new relations between it and the Board of the University. The act related to the distinguished Professor of Biblical Theology, a personal friend, at that time, of the writer. I had no sympathy with the act. I sincerely deplored it, but I never doubted the honesty and conscientiousness of the actors. As in the novel and peculiar circumstances, the wrong, however great it might have been, was rectified by rescinding the act or vote at the same sitting, the storm of excitement in its fury and prolongation was altogether disproportioned to the offence. Here at Hamilton and then in that tempest of feeling, did the thought of removal come into being. This was an ominous beginning. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." The elaborate reasons alleged for removal and the objections raised against this location, were after-thoughts. Nothing is more certain to my mind than the relation of cause and effect existing between the feeling engendered by that unfortunate act of the Education Board and the removal movement. If the former had not occurred the latter would never have been thought of. It was admitted by removalists at the time that one was the occasion of the other, by which they meant that there were valid reasons for removal behind the occurrence, and that this merely opened the way for their assertion and enforcement. But my position is that the feeling excited by the act of the Education Board was the substantial and efficient cause of the subsequent movement. There was absolutely nothing behind which had any force in raising the question. Had it been raised on its merits it would have been scouted by the general voice. Whatever secret opinion any one might have entertained as to the preferableness of another location, they never would in the natural course of things have caused any serious suggestion or stir about removal. The vague talk years before of removing to Buffalo in flush times in consideration of a magnificent endowment, had no significance whatever. It is a simple historic fact that those who became the most interested in the measure had a short time before its origin uttered the most glowing eulogy upon the present location. "Its healthiness and beauty, the refinement and intelligence of its citizens, and cheapness of living, and other things, made Hamilton the very spot for a great Institution of learning. Its original selection was especially providential." No wonder, when the project of removal transpired and came abroad, it took the whole denomination and the public by surprise, except those who had been let into the secret. It is proper to say just here parenthetically that we never supposed that the people of Rochester had anything whatever to do with the origination of the removal enterprise. This child, without a recognized parentage, was carried thither and secretly presented to them. It seemed a goodly child, and they adopted it, without anticipating the "sea of troubles" which finally obliged them to turn it out of doors. The project, however originated, came before the public with such prestige of novelty, grandeur of proportions, magnificence of promise, and emblazonry of bright names of "good men and true," that many leading minds of the denomination were interested, charmed and enlisted at once. Some of the ablest and most accomplished, the most powerful in position and influence, and personally the most honored, revered and loved, urged it forward by voice, pen and resources. It is a fact, however, capable of illustration in every sphere of moral action, that the merit of a cause is not necessarily guaranteed by the personal excellence of its advocates. The best men, personally, have sometimes been the earnest advocates of causes intrinsically bad, and have vainly thought they were doing God service. The cause seemed good to them at the time. The idea, as first put forth, took this form. The "beloved Institution" was to be taken up bodily with its Faculty, students, Board, funds, movable property, history, associations, yea, even the remains of its sainted founders, and transferred unmutilated and totally in substance and form, to Rochester, with the addition of an endowment of $100,000 or $150,000, and noble buildings of architectural grandeur and beauty, leaving nothing behind but unsightly structures of shale and mortar fit only for the abode of owls and bats! It is not strange that thousands were dazzled by the apparition of such a meteor on the horizon of our Zion. What lover of the Institution, what loyal alumnus might not well be excused for hailing with enthusiasm such glorious promise for the object of his warmest affections? What a contrast between the present of its condition and the "to be" of its career! For its site, a flourishing city on the great thoroughfare of the nation, instead of a small village among the retired hills of Madison quite shut out from the great centres of human intercourse—an ample endowment instead of a precarious life fed by the stinted favors of the churches, and so on. I frankly confess that I myself was at first affected by the glamour of the novel and brilliant phenomenon. I pondered much as to its real significancy. I could not commit myself to the portentous movement, nor did I feel at liberty to oppose it. I stood in doubt and silence. I said to my colleagues that I thought that we as a Faculty would best consult our duty and dignity by taking a neutral position and in the issue we could gracefully acquiesce in whatever that issue might be. A majority did not acquiesce in this view, but actively interested themselves in the movement, and deemed it the most judicious policy to precipitate its consummation before opposition could be organized and made formidable. Just here I took my first position. It was this: In a question so grave and radical, and involving so great changes, there should be no haste, but ample time and opportunity given for the freest and most exhaustive discussion before the whole denomination. This course I deemed fair to both sides, and due to the proportions and proprieties of the extraordinary crisis. It was not offensive antagonism to any person or party. In this attitude of mind, I visited New York, as usual during the holidays. I found Deacon Colgate adverse to the whole movement. With his rare sagacity and common-sense he pointed out the serious evils involved in removal. I told him my own position without committing myself even to him any further. Two of my worthy colleagues hastened to the city "to counteract the influence of Prof. Eaton against the removal movement!" Deacon Colgate told them that he had conversed very freely with Bro. Eaton on the subject, but he could not learn from any thing that he said "on which side he was!" I did, as long as I could, hold my mind in equipoise, but the more I reflected the more I was impressed with the force of the reasonings against the change, and finally yielded to this overwhelming force. It is not pleasant to me to speak of myself as I must in this painful history. It is not egotism. In the providence of God I became so livingly and actively identified with the history that it can not be written without including these personal allusions. Facts require it, and I would humbly and unboastingly submit the historic facts. I did not at first oppose removal, and this perhaps should be put down to my discredit, or at least abate the credit some have set down to my account. It was one of the sorest trials of my life to separate on this question from long-loved friends, my colleagues, brethren in Rochester, in Western New York, in New York City, and elsewhere, who were bound to my heart by the ever-strengthening bond of loving communion for many years. I couldn't help it. A strange, invisible, but distinctly felt power pressed me onward in the course my sense of right and duty dictated. Those who bitterly condemned me and cruelly impeached my motives, had they known the soreness of my heart the while, would have from sheer pity turned their bitter censure into indulgent sympathy. But there were some who from the first viewed the whole thing with distrust and alarm. Among these were Dr. Kendrick, Prof. Hascall and Deacon Colgate. The issue was soon made up before the public, and parties formed and the conflict begun.

It was carried on through the first year by moral weapons, by arguments and prudential considerations embodied in appeals and counter-appeals issued as the voice of mass-meetings at which earnest speeches and determined resolves were uttered and formulated, by personal correspondence, communications pro and con in the religious and secular papers, and in an animated contest in the Legislature over an application for an act granting liberty to remove the University to Rochester. A compromise was finally agreed to by both parties, the main condition of which was that in case $50,000 was raised by a specified time by the friends of Hamilton, then the University was not to be removed. In default of this the Board should be at liberty to decide the question. It was distinctly understood and a positive assurance given, that no hindrances should be interposed by the advocates of removal to the raising of this fund. The extension of time from June to August, in the final action of the Legislature, for complying with the moneyed condition, was used as a reason to justify the disregard of the pledge made at Albany by the representatives of removal. The reason was not sufficient. The sentiment of the Legislature on reflection was decided that the time named in the first draft of the bill was unreasonably and oppressively short to raise such an amount. The committee of the Hamilton citizens had no doubt of their power to defeat the permissive bill, but they accepted the compromise by the wish and advice of Dr. Kendrick and myself. I solemnly pledged the honor of my removal brethren to the reluctant committee who anticipated opposition and obstructions, that they would not oppose the raising of the proposed fund. It was, however, opposed through the appeals to Baptists throughout the State not to tie the hands of the Board by fulfilling the condition of the compromise!

The controversy gathered bitterness as it proceeded in this mode. At the anniversary in 1848, after a whole day's discussion of intense earnestness on the merits of the case, conditional votes, under extraordinary appliances, were obtained, first in the Board and subsequently in the Education Society, in favor of removal. The peculiar circumstances attending these decisions in the view of the opponents of removal deprived them of all moral force.

The Board of the University had rejected on a mere technicality the fulfillment of the condition of the Legislative Compromise in as good a subscription and bond (whatever cavilling criticisms might have been passed upon its validity) as was ever made and executed. The friends of Hamilton drew up, therefore, a new bond for $50,000, under a penalty in the failure of its fulfillment of $100,000, signed by men representing in the aggregate more than a million of money. It will be seen that the friends of Hamilton did not confine themselves to verbal arguments and legal technicalities to thwart removal, but were ready to bind themselves to a bona fide pecuniary obligation of $50,000, to sustain the Institution in its original location. They brought it for submission to the Society at its final meeting, when the "snap judgment" of a few removalists was taken, forestalling further negotiations on their part. The bond was subsequently submitted to the Board of the University, but declined on the ground that it was too late to consider and act on it. I am pained to be obliged to record here the proceeding called the "snap judgment." It was the assembling of leading removalists in the pit of the Chapel in anticipation of the time designated for the adjourned meeting of the Education Society, and with parts assigned, and watches in hand, seizing the first moment (as they supposed) of the appointed hour, and in the space of about five minutes, organizing, passing four resolutions, making two prayers, and adjourning sine die! In the mean time, members of the Society were hastening to meet the time, old men such as John Peck, Alexander M. Beebee, and others toiling up the hill to vote against removal. When we arrived at the door of the building, the appalling announcement met us that the Society had met, acted for removal, adjourned, and all was over! But few of the friends of Hamilton had reached the Chapel, yet a vehement protest was uttered by one of them against the hurried and unfair proceeding, but it was unheeded. Twenty-one removalists, all told, did the business in this way, at the final meeting of the Society! No, it was not the Society at all, but an irregular body of excellent men acting in the name of the Society, for it was proved by the affidavits of a score or more of good men that the legal time had been anticipated, namely, the town-clock had not struck the hour before the whole transaction had been consummated! It was a remarkable instance of over-reaching. It was alleged as a justification of this extraordinary proceeding that the friends of Hamilton had rallied the members of the Society from neighboring towns, and removalists would inevitably be defeated in a full vote. The question naturally occurs, was there anything unlawful or unfair in this? But it was in great part rumor and exaggeration. The singular character of the previous proceedings had strengthened and determined the opposition, and a fair vote would have overwhelmingly defeated the project. Removal, therefore, was never carried in any legal form.

It belongs to this part of the sad history that some "40" of the citizens of Hamilton had constitutionally made themselves members of the Education Society, in order to arrest removal measures. This was done under the honest conviction that they had a right to use legal means to defeat an illegal purpose. The only question that could properly arise was as to the expediency of using the means under the peculiar circumstances. The Constitution was explicit as to the right, and a standing custom opened the way for its exercise. I knew nothing of this proceeding at the time, but Dr. Kendrick did, and suggested it as a legal remedy in the last resort. He had uniformly, for years, at the annual meeting of the Society, invited membership on the constitutional requirement, and it was no novel thing. The votes of these new members with others defeated the preliminary resolution for removal, but to the number of "40" were arbitrarily rejected by the chairman, and the resolution declared carried by the remaining votes! Though these men had as much right legally to vote as the worthy chairman, they begged to have the right settled by a competent committee, made up of both parties, whose decision they would abide. Their earnest entreaty was disregarded. They then declared that they would waive their right, and leave the final result to be decided by Baptists whose right could not be questioned either on legal or moral grounds, and they did abstain from all further attempts to vote. I subsequently took the pains to analyze the questioned votes. There were 36 and not "40," and singularly enough, twelve were found to be from Baptists in good standing, twelve from members of the Baptist Society, and the remainder from worthy citizens not Baptists, but not "unknown to the Baptist denomination," as the hospitable doors of most of them had ever been open to Baptist representatives at our Anniversaries. Some of those whose votes were summarily rejected were afterwards found to be life-members of the Education Society, but the fact had fallen out of their memory, and they paid their dollar for the privilege that was already theirs. I am happy to have this opportunity before this great assembly of representative Baptists, to vindicate my fellow-citizens from aspersion in their honest and legitimate measures, to retain the Institution on its old ground.

The friends of Hamilton felt justified, nay, compelled to carry the case into the courts, where removal measures were thwarted by successive decisions, and Hascall and Rogers' injunction finally pronounced "perpetually confirmed." The case was argued with consummate ability on both sides, for the removalists by SAMUEL STEVENS and HAMILTON HARRIS, of Albany, and against, by TIMOTHY

JENKINS, CHARLES P. KIRKLAND, and JAMES W. NYE. These jurists and advocates had no superiors in the State. The great principles, legal and moral, underlying the questions involved, were enunciated and elucidated with rare power and eloquence. A very intelligent removalist said to me that he "never listened to an abler and clearer legal argument of two hours' length than Judge Kirkland's, before Judge Allen of the Supreme Court, at Oswego, on the motion to dissolve Havens' and Beardsley's Injunction. The injunction was, it is true, dissolved, but it was on the ground of the incompetency of the plaintiffs, and not on the merits of the case. As renewed by Hascall and Rogers, it was triumphantly sustained. The final hearing of the case was before Judge Philo Gridley, April 23, 1850, at Morrisville, when the decree was uttered establishing forever both the Seminary of the Education Society and Madison University in their location at Hamilton. While the case was in the courts, two so-called "Educational Conventions," called at the instance of removalists, were held in Albany, one June 12th (in default of a meeting of the Education Society), and the other Oct. 9th, 1849. At the latter the final "compromise" was adopted, whereby the University was to be separated from the Education Society, and taken to Rochester, and the Theological Seminary was to remain at Hamilton, but in case the friends of Hamilton refused to acquiesce in this arrangement, then to establish a new educational enterprise, literary and theological, at Rochester, and leave the old Institution to its fate, or rather, as was sarcastically said by some, "to the tender mercies of God." The last clause gave a wholly one-sided character to the compromise, and was in spirit a threat to non-removalists that in case they would not accept so much, they should lose all. I think that this brief synopsis of the great controversy up to this crisis (at best but a shadowy sketch of the main facts) will serve as an adequate basis for the vindication of the course of the friends of Hamilton. I shall weave in other important facts as I proceed, and touch points with which they have special connections.

Removal was resisted mainly on the following grounds: I. It was unnecessary; II. inexpedient; III. perilous; IV. wrong; and V. sacrilegious. Every one of these grounds became a conviction in the minds of the opponents of removal, intense and absorbing as their mental and moral nature admitted of. They believed, and therefore spoke and acted. In such a grave crisis, with these burning convictions, they could not be turned from their course by the opinions of men, however reputedly wise and conspicuously eminent. That removal was not necessary was argued from the fact that the Institution had wonderfully prospered from its origin, steadily keeping in advance of the most sanguine expectations of its warmest friends. Indeed, its very prosperity was used as an argument on the other side. It had "outgrown" its original location, and demanded a larger place for its ever-widening expansion. "Hamilton was but a green-house pot," said a prominent removalist in a public and eloquent speech, "it had answered well enough while the tree was in its early stages of growth, (a sapling, as it were,) but it had now become so large and was growing so rapidly, the pot was inadequate, and must necessarily cramp further developments!" I have repeatedly heard in the edifying and no doubt earnest prayers of my respected colleagues enlisted in removal, in the chapel service, the petition that the Lord would "bring the beloved Institution into a large place." The figure was ingenious, and the prayer devout without question, but both were misleading rhetoric as applied to the subject. The strange position was taken by some, indicative of the sophistry that ran through the most of the removal argument, that the Institution had grown so vigorously, and was so buoyant with life and health that it must die if it had not change of place and air! It was alleged that "an endowment had become essential," (this was admitted,) and that "it could not be endowed where it stood." This was "denied totally and emphatically." Taking into account the sacrifices of property and the expense necessarily attending a new location, it was much easier to endow it on the old ground than on the new. It was held on our part to be a pure assumption that there was anything really in the way of endowment here. The churches and friends had always given to the Institution what it had asked, though it had been all too modest in the amount asked for. If now it must be endowed, it would be done for the asking. An endowment had been projected, but no effort worthy of the name had been made to raise it before the "removal" was sprung upon the denomination.

The inexpediency was urged on the ground that in addition to the sacrifices of property and the expenses of removal and preparations for new accommodations—grounds, buildings, and so forth—offsetting in great part the proposed endowment at Rochester, a rural location for a seat of learning, if reasonably accessible, was altogether to be preferred to one in a city. In respect to favorable circumstances for study, health, morals, and cheapness of living, the advantages were all clearly on the side of the former, and that other influences emanating from city life were not favorable to the best development of youthful character.

The perils of removal were argued on the ground of the utter impracticability of taking the Institution in its integrity to Rochester. The idea was a chimera. The change would be too great. It was an untried experiment. Such a thing had never been known as an attempt to remove a great Institution, with a growth and history of thirty years, from its old ground to a distant location. Brown and Yale were referred to as examples to the contrary; but when these institutions were removed only a few miles (not out of their original neighborhood) they had existed but a short time, and all belonging to these now gigantic concerns could have been carried from place to place in a pedler's cart. These cases furnished no analogy. We did believe that the proposed attempt at removal would prove very much like that of taking a mighty oak from its native forest, and transplanting it to a far-off land, expecting it to live and flourish.

The question of the wrong of removal divided itself into two parts, legal and moral. There were vested rights in the matter of location, in a solemn contract, fulfilled perfectly on the part of the original covenantees, and declared by our most eminent jurists to be "a good and valid contract," and "its fulfilment complete."

Our courts have uniformly given the most liberal construction to such rights, in so far that the principle seems settled that all donations, legacies, etc., bestowed upon a locally established Institution, are made upon the condition, whether expressed or not, that it is to remain permanently where located at the time of such benefaction, and if removed to a distant locality, such gifts are forfeited, and may be reclaimed by donors, or their heirs.

The people of Hamilton were to be commended in contending for these rights. They did, to their immortal honor, fight right nobly, Baptist and non-Baptist alike, as a community, and their victory was deserved. The objection that it was a material defect in the Constitution of the Education Society, that its original constituency was not confined to members of the Baptist denomination, lies equally against several others of our great benevolent organizations. There is a moneyed consideration, but no denominational qualification required to become members of the popular body. The control of the organizations is deposited with the official working force, and cannot be reached except in the line of their organic law. There is, therefore, an insuperable barrier against all control, other than Baptist, in the councils and management of the educational enterprise at Hamilton. The people of Hamilton, not Baptist, again and again protested against the allegation that they desired, in any way, to interfere with the character and management of the Institution. In the simple matter of location they had rights guaranteed by the fulfilment of a valid contract. The lapse of time could not weaken their legal claim. They were, as might be expected, profoundly excited upon the subject so vitally connected with all their dearest interests, and might be indulgently judged for some more than ordinary ebullitions of the passions and infirmities common to human nature. Individually, no doubt, things were said and done in a state of excitement, which sober reflection would not approve. But as a body, acting for the defeat of removal, they presumed to take no measures without consulting Dr. KENDRICK, Prof. HASCALL, and some others of us. The committee of the citizens were in constant communication with Dr. KENDRICK, gathered round his bed of pain, and receiving reverently his opinions and advice. They repeatedly yielded their own judgment to his, and did not do a single thing to defeat removal, without his and HASCALL'S concurrence and approval. Judge MASON and Senator NYE, who know the minute history of the removal agitation in its connection with the people of Hamilton, will bear me out in these statements. These gentlemen, the one a profound jurist of spotless reputation, personal and judicial—an ornament of the highest judicial tribunal of the State;—the other, one of the shrewdest and most eloquent advocates at the Bar and in the Senate, drew out and elucidated the legal argument with a clearness and force which no subsequent assaults could impair.

The legal difficulty was insuperable. The connection of moral and legal wrong is very intimate. There is a condemnatory ethical element in the infraction of legal obligation, except under the most imperative counter obligations of a moral or religious kind. But there was an independent moral wrong in this case. It was a disregard of the plain intentions and expectations of founders and donors, who had labored and given of their abundance, and also "out of their poverty," to sustain the Institution at Hamilton, without the most remote thought of its ever being removed. I have recently been informed, by the witness to the bequest of Deacon PAYNE, that the matter of permanently locating the Institution on the ground bequeathed, as a condition, was discussed by those present, and Mrs. PAYNE and Judge STOWER (one of the collateral heirs) insisted upon its insertion in the document. This was not done, in fact; but the witness declared that the condition was the clear and distinct understanding of the parties. Its insertion was not deemed necessary, from the total improbability of any attempt at change.

Lastly, that removal was sacrilegious was pressed on the ground that it was not only a violation of the most sacred compacts, but, in its consequences, a perversion of the whole purpose of the educational enterprise at Hamilton. We have shown that the acceptance of the charter of the University was not designed in the least to limit or infringe upon the original purpose of the Society, namely, to educate the Baptist ministry, but to serve as an agency to accomplish this work more completely and effectually. It was an element to be appropriated and worked into the scheme of its operations with a view to make stronger the power for carrying out its sacred object. The University was really the creature of the Society, and though, from the necessities of the case, made a complete whole of itself, the Society breathed into it the breath of life, and identified it with its own existence. The ultimate control of the Society over the University was secured by the "Terms of Compact." It became, in fact, livingly and indissolubly bound up with the Society, and was not competent to act independently for a purpose of its own, unless the Society should think proper to dissolve the connection formally entered into, and dispense with its services. This was provided for in the contract between the two parties, the Society being required to give two years' notice for the dissolution, when convinced that the original object and interest of the Society demanded it. Such an exigency, however, was not anticipated by the contracting parties. Now, I state as a simple and historical fact that it was early disclosed by those who would have the shaping of affairs, if removal was accomplished, that the purpose was to disrupt the bonds between the Society and the University, and to make the Theological Seminary organically distinct, and wholly independent of the University, having nothing in fact essentially to do with it; and the University, thus set free from all connection and control of the Society, was to be remodelled and reconstructed so as to admit into partnership, in the government and instruction, other denominations—a majority of the Board and Faculty remaining Baptists. Now, whether right or wrong, the anti-removalists did honestly believe, on what they regarded as reliable authority, that this programme would be carried out if removal were effected; and hence a new element of ten-fold intensity was introduced into the opposition. It was henceforth a contest not so much against removal, as for the very existence of the Institution, as it was at Hamilton—an Institution thoroughly and exclusively Baptist throughout all its departments, from the beginning to the end. Dr. KENDRICK, though on his back with his whole physical frame a mass of excruciating pain, and every breath an agony, rallied all the energies of his still powerful intellect, and wrote scores of letters with his own trembling hand, bolstered up in bed, or dictated to his daughter, sitting by his bed-side, to the old friends of the Institution, calling their attention to this aspect of the removal question, and expressing strongly the conviction that it involved the destruction of the “cherished School.” This appeal of the dying saint produced a powerful effect, and induced many, who had favored removal as a measure to provide more liberally for the Institution of their affections, supposing it was to remain unchanged in its new location, in its identity, character, and relations, to pause and hold back. This effect was attempted to be neutralized by a public statement from removalists, not denying that other than Baptists were to participate in the management of the University, but asserting generally that it was to be “as much Baptist at Rochester as at Hamilton.” We have no imputation to cast upon their honesty in this public manifesto, but we know the impression made by it was not in accordance with the theory foreshadowed. How the University at Rochester, with three Pædobaptists in its Faculty, and a number of the prominent members of the Board of like denominational standing, could be as much Baptist as it was at Hamilton, where the whole Faculty and Board, with the exception of the legal counsel of the latter, were conscientious Baptists, we were too simple-minded to comprehend. We deeply felt the conviction that it was an utter impossibility. A leading removalist wrote to me that the University at Hamilton was too sectarian, and ought to be "liberalized" by admitting other denominations to share in its management. Another one of equal standing said, in my hearing, that it was to be the "Union College" of the western portion of the State. These men were leaders in the enterprise. A distinguished Pædobaptist, Dr. DEWEY, also wrote to me in reply to an inquiry as to what was the understanding of the Pædobaptist community in Rochester, relative to the prospective character of the University, if removed. (I was compelled to make this inquiry to repel a charge of misrepresentation.) The reply was that "while no formal pledge had been given, it was the clear understanding that in case the University was removed to that city, it was to be unsectarianized, and other denominations to be invited to a representation in its direction and instruction—that these denominations were contributing to the enterprise with this understanding, and that if Madison University came to Rochester, "to teach immersion," they could have nothing to do with it, and would establish another University beside it,—that a charter for a University had previously been obtained by Pædobaptists in Rochester, and was to be set aside to give place to Madison University, if it should be adjusted to a satisfactory liberal policy. We could not be mistaken on this head, and I am the more explicit, because Dr. KENDRICK, and others of us, were charged with misrepresentation in this thing. I would vindicate truth and the memory of the dead. There was no misrepresentation, and this has been demonstrated by the actual historical fact, that the proposed arrangement has been carried out at Rochester, in respect to the new Institutions; i. e., the Theological Seminary, with the Society for Ministerial Education, exclusively Baptist, is entirely separated from the Rochester University, and the University so shaped in policy as to take into partnership other denominations in its conduct and instruction.

Finally, let me add, in concluding this history of that period of disastrous agitation, the friends of Hamilton rejected the Compromise proposed at the Albany Convention, whereby the Theological Seminary was to be retained, and the University go to Rochester. They were severely censured for this as "audaciously disobeying the voice of the denomination." They did no such thing. They always held to the belief, whether founded on truth or not, that the great body of the denomination did not, in their judgment and hearts, favor removal. There were members of the Board even that voted for removal who assured me that they did not, in their hearts, favor the project, but under the circumstances it had come to seem to them a dire necessity. Much less did the denomination under any circumstances favor the destruction of the Institution. The apparent sentiment for removal we regarded as in great part manufactured, and that the contemplated results were not understood. We could not accept the decision of the Convention as authoritative. It was called by removalists, and for removal purposes. The friends of this location had nothing to do with the call. They were not even consulted in the measure. After it was called however, they did issue a "Fraternal Address" to Baptists, (drawn up by my worthy friend and co-worker against removal. Dr. Spear,* whose efficient and invaluable services in that great conflict merit emphatic and distinguished recognition), concurring in the call, and requesting the friends of Hamilton to attend.

In this Address, signed by a considerable body of brethren in and out of Hamilton, it is submitted (mark the language), "that the only ground for harmony in the proposed Convention on the question to come before it, is to let the old Institution alone, and start a new enterprise at Rochester, if its friends should think proper so to do." The Convention was wholly an irresponsible body, not made up of representative men from churches and associations, or any recognized societies connected with the denomination. It was simply a mass meeting, composed indeed of the most respectable and influential individuals, but as a body acting without any binding authority whatever. The influence of its decisions could only be of a moral kind, and that depending upon their intrinsic justness and wisdom. Again, anti-removalists never committed themselves to accept its decision, and especially if it bore malignly against the integrity and best interests of the old Institution. The compromise was never fairly and fully discussed. It was drawn up by a committee of seven, all of whom save one, (the editor of the Register, who was added after the committee was formed) were removal men, and introduced and carried within an hour of final adjournment, the previous discussions having been of a general character, and mainly upon the question of removal proper. Notwithstanding, the anti-removalists were willing to consider deliberately and prayerfully, the state of the question in its new form. This was all to which they committed themselves. The chief representatives of Hamilton, immediately after the final decision, came to gether with Deacon Colgate, to consult as to future action. A form of adhesion was presented to us by the chairman of the committee on the compromise as the organ of the majority, to be adopted at once, and foreclose further discussion on the whole question. We considered this movement as offensively obtrusive, and respectfully declined the overture by answering, "We must have time for the consideration of so great a question." It is true that many of the friends of Hamilton at first thought the acceptance of the compromise the best thing we could do under the circumstances, but they had no authority to commit the Boards. When the Boards came together by special call on the 4th of the following December to consider the compromise, in an unusually full meeting, the whole question was reviewed, and the ultimate bearing of the compromise on the interests of the enterprise at Hamilton carefully and solemnly considered. They came to see clearly, that the acceptance of the compromise would be disastrous, even to the extent of the virtual destruction of the whole enterprise at Hamilton; and after fervent supplication for Divine direction, and committing the interests of their sacred trust to God, who had in the darkest time in its past history appeared for its deliverance and enlargement, they did with the most perfect unanimity reject the ALBANY COMPROMISE.

The formal rejection is embodied in the following Preamble and Resolutions taken from the Report of 1850:

"Whereas, While we recognize the right of our brethren, in convention assembled, to instruct us on all open questions, we are at the same time convinced (after mature deliberation) from the exercise of our own sober, and, we think, candid judgment, confirmed by the opinions of those favoring, as well as those opposing removal, that by yielding the charter of Madison University, as advised, we should greatly impair the vitality of what remains, and probably insure its total destruction, thus defeating the expressed intention of the Albany Convention, therefore “Resolved, That as Baptists and as a Board appointed to be the guardians of sacred rights, we dare not assume the responsibility of surrendering a charter which was granted especially for the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution, which by the Legislature was adapted to the relations it sustains to the Education Society, and which has become identified with its influences, resources and supports that for thirty years have been gathering around the School.

“Resolved, That in view of our responsibilities, we see no way open but to leave our Literary and Theological Institution (now known as Madison University) as Providence has organized it—an Institution with a college course, and college powers; not only not divesting it of its present elements of growth and usefulness, but, if possible, adding to it new elements of life and vigor.

“Resolved, That it would give us the highest satisfaction to follow literally the course marked out by our brethren in the Albany Convention, if we could do it consistently with a sense of our obligations to the trust committed to us.”

And were they to blame for this? That “Albany Convention” never designed that in any event the Hamilton Institution should be destroyed. I believe to-day, and have always believed, that if removal had been submitted to it pure and simple, though called by removalists for removal purposes, it would have been voted down. It did favor a new enterprise at Rochester, and the friends of Hamilton, when this question was submitted, voted with the body; I did so myself, heartily. It was in accordance with what I had urged, from the beginning, i. e., to drop all attempts to remove, and to build anew. Let the old remain on its consecrated ground to go on with its heaven-appointed mission, and add to our educational power by a wholly new enterprise. I had no doubt that the denomination could and would support both. This question of a new enterprise at Rochester was subsequently represented as a test question on removal in the Convention! And the vote was proclaimed by an enthusiastic removalist as standing 594 to 6! How preposterous! There were not more than three hundred voted, all told, and I heard no nays at all. The vote was the real exponent of the only true harmonizing element in the Convention, as declared in the “Fraternal Address.”

THE LAST ACT IN THE "REMOVAL" DRAMA.

This act was so extraordinary, and every way so out of all regard to justice and moral propriety, that I submit its simple history with the naked authenticated facts (drawn up by Dr. SPEAR) taken from the Report of the Education Board for the year 1851. The author of this history is marked by great equanimity of temper and moderation of expression. The extract is as follows: "It has been the study and prayer of your Board to learn and do the will of that great people in the State of New York, whose interests under you they have been attempting more especially to subserve. In every form in which they could hear a voice that seemed to utter a "distinct sound" they have attentively listened. They have heard no other voice than one bidding them to "go forward" in this work, building upon the spot consecrated by the labors and sacrifices of a Kendrick, a Hascall, an Olmstead, a Payne and others, and still glorious by the manifested presence of the Most High. This voice, very emphatic, has come from the East and West as well as from the centre, from the North and the South. It has come from churches, associations, and conventions, from alumni, patrons and friends. It has come from the field of missions in the East and from the broad valley of the West, from Texas, California and Oregon. It has been too clear to be misunderstood, and we dared not turn our backs upon an enterprise with respect to which the cry "Onward" was so loud and long. Nor of the Albany Convention called by removalists was the voice at all different. Though this may have authorized the establishment of a new enterprise, it never required or advised the abandonment of the old. The deliberations of that Convention were all in answer to the question presented by the Board of Madison University, namely: Shall we leave at Hamilton what is now at Hamilton, while on the other hand we secure the advantages which invite us to the occupancy of the Western site, by at once organizing an entirely new educational movement, Collegiate and Theological, at that point? In following the proceedings as they issue from this point, it is clear that if the Convention authorized anything, it authorized removalists to drop all controversy, to terminate the legal case, and allow the friends of Madison University to rally round it for support in its old location at Hamilton. We regret to record that our removal brethren after the Convention, and without the least authority from it direct or implied, instructed the counsel for removal to bring the case on before the Supreme Court of the State, and that it was prosecuted thereafter as far as there was any reasonable ground of hope that they would succeed. They had no authority from the Convention for an attempt to embarrass or crush the enterprise at Hamilton, but only to "leave" it. We had authority in a quiet and peaceful manner to stand by those interests which our removal brethren were either leaving, or were extremely reluctant to leave. We did it, not only because we found denominational authority, but because we had the fullest conviction that the cause of ministerial and general education in the State required it. We have done it with no unfriendliness of feeling or opposition to the new enterprise or its friends, but wishing them the highest success and striving on our part to cherish between the two enterprises the most amicable relations. There is work enough for both which can be accomplished without strife, and fields of patronage and influence sufficiently broad and distinct. We shall endeavor by Divine grace to emulate those generous and exalted sentiments which actuated the early founders of this noble Institution, and say to all who are engaged in the same work, whether in this State or out, "Let there be no strife, we are brethren." There are men, there are benevolent hearts, there are candidates for the ministry both of the poor and wealthy who are thirsting for knowledge, "to be taught the way of God more perfectly," there are churches and missionary stations eagerly waiting for laborers, and the prize in this great work lies between us. It is for the meek and humble who can "take suffering wrongfully," for the active and resolute.

It remained for the Board more especially to set forth the train of events and the acts with which they have been identified during the past year. Immediately upon their election, it fell upon them through a committee appointed for that purpose, consisting of the Secretary and Treasurer, to negotiate an adjustment of the University Board to the Hamilton relations. The adjustment was happily, though with no small difficulty, secured. To understand the nature of the transaction, the following things must be observed :

1. The former Education Board, as early as December 4th, 1849, in a large meeting well represented from New York City and other parts of the State, with perfect harmony and in due form, had dropped the defence of the right, to remove the Education Society, instructed their counsel at Albany to proceed no further, and empowered the Executive Committee to use all proper measures to free the University Board from the removal embarrassment.

2. In view of the proceedings of the Education Board above alluded to and subsequently to them, the Counsel at Albany being instructed by removalists, and choosing their own time and judges, proceeded to "move" the University case before the Supreme Court of the State. This motion of theirs resulted in a decision against removal and a Decree of the Court, April 23d, 1850, issued on grounds which in the opinion of able counsel on both sides rendered it irreversible. Inasmuch as this decree enjoined upon the University Board to fulfil specifically the Contract with the Education Society (see terms of arrangement) and in accordance with it, to go forward in the management and support of the University "upon the premises" at Hamilton, the then existing members of the Board must go forward and do this, or put men in their places, who from their sympathies and confidence in the location would do it.

3. About three weeks after this decree (May 10th), the Madison University Board met at Rochester (ten being present and they removalists) and a friend of the Hamilton location, who attended for that purpose, proposed to have the adjustment then and there made in order to give suitable time to make arrangements for the following Academic year, before the present should close upon them. But it was deemed expedient or necessary to postpone such action till another meeting of the Board at the close of the year in August.

4. The University Board during a three years' removal controversy having filled vacancies made by deaths, and resignations and change of residence with removal men, had left upon it scarcely enough in all to make a quorum of those who were friendly to the location at Hamilton. It was under these circumstances that the University Board met in August with just a quorum and no more, and most of that number removal brethren. They knew the nature of the decree and what it required. We also knew that if the Board dispersed without adjusting the quorum to the location at Hamilton, it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, again to gather a quorum of that Board, and we might be under the necessity of applying to the Supreme Court and Legislature to regain the use of the Board. The Board were aware that a committee in behalf of Hamilton was in readiness to attend to the adjustment, and previously to the adjustment they passed the following :

“ Resolved, That the account of the Legal Committee at Albany for Attorneys and other agents be allowed to an amount of six hundred and twenty-five dollars.” And again, “ Whereas a majority of the Trustees present propose now to resign their seats in this Board,

“ Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to elect substitutes on the nomination of Deacon WILLIAM COBB of Hamilton, provided a written pledge be first given by responsible individuals, that the Professors who shall resign shall be paid in full on or before the 10th of September next, and that the bill of the Legal Committee at Albany, not to exceed six hundred and twenty-five dollars, be paid by the first of November next.”

To this bill, which was presented as connected with the above proviso, no serious objection was made, save to the payment of the counsel for removal at Albany. It was admitted that the Board of Madison University whatever the constitution of its membership, was technically holden for the payment of arrearages on the salaries of the retiring Professors ; but under the circumstances, as they had been identified with the retiring members of the Board in the interest of removal and to the serious detriment of Hamilton, it did seem hard that individual citizens should be required to pay out of their private pockets in so short a time so large a sum as nearly $3000. However, they were willing to stand in place of the Board for this amount, hard as the requirement was. But to pay the counsel for removal was another thing. It was reasonably objected that the University Board itself chartered for sustaining an Institution at Hamilton, were not legally or morally bound to pay a bill which had been made by a fruitless attempt to remove, much less should individuals who were opposed to removal be compelled to pledge their individual responsibility for the payment of removal counsel!—that security for such payment, if looked for anywhere, should be found in the Board that made it, and not in individuals—that Hamilton friends expected to pay their own bills, though these had been brought upon them, not by themselves, but by others, and that Rochester friends ought to pay theirs. These objections, however, were waived, and we informed the members of the Board that though we regarded it unjust to require us while in a strait to pay the bill for the removal counsel, still if it was required we should generously meet it. It was required, and the following paper drawn up by the Secretary to meet the case was produced :

Due to the retiring Professors for residue of salaries,	$2,700.00
Due to counsel at Albany	625.00
Due in all	3,325.00

The subscribers become responsible to see that the above sums are promptly paid—that due the Faculty by the 10th of September next, and that due at Albany by the 1st of November, provided that the present members of the Board shall duly elect such men as Dea. Cobb shall nominate :*

The paper was declared satisfactory. The adjustment immediately took place by seven of our Rochester friends one by one leaving their seats, and seven Hamilton friends one by one taking their places. In each instance too there was the least number to act that could act and render the transaction legal. The act was over and the Board was transformed. It had still a bare quorum present, but that quorum was made up of men who believed that God had chosen the University site at Hamilton, and that this site in his eyes would ever be glorious. The moment of transition was one of deep, and to your committee, one of solemn and overwhelming interest. It was a moment of “darkness that could be felt.” But behind that darkness we saw the gleaming of a bright day. We introduce this transaction to the Society for no other purpose than to show another and signal instance of the over-ruling providence of God in this enterprise. Just three years from the time the removal project was originated it was settled. The Institution emerged as if into a new—a resurrection life, but it emerged through a way the narrowest possible, and yet

* The speaker feels that it is simply justice to say that to the loyalty and firmness of Dr. Spear and to his clear comprehension of the crisis, as well as his readiness and ability to assume pecuniary risk, was preëminently due the consummation of this adjustment.

Thus far from the official record. The strange facts are undisputed. This last act was declared to be "magnanimous" on the part of the retiring removalists. To an unprejudiced mind, we think the magnanimity does not visibly emerge!

1850-1869.

Relieved of the crushing incubus of removal by the crowning act already detailed, the Institution rallied under unexpected inspirations.

The new Boards organized at once and filled the vacancies in the Faculty as follows :

The fall term of 1850 opened with the teachers at their posts, and 33 students in attendance; but every class was represented, from the senior theological down to the junior academic. The organization was unbroken throughout. Dr. Taylor, the head of Lewisburg University, acceded to the Presidency of the University in the fall of 1851. He brought with him great strength and popularity. It was indeed the most felicitous choice for the University which could have been made from the whole denomination. His reputation as an educator and a disciplinarian was second to that of no other—he had for years previously been connected with the Institution, and knew minutely all its history. During the first year of the new regime, the number of students increased from 33 to 84. Within the three subsequent years under the administration of President Taylor, the number reached 216!—considerably over the number at the beginning of the removal agitation. Friends and resources multiplied and augmented. Hundreds, yes, thousands, who had gone into removal, returned with new affection to the old and revived Institution. An endowment of over $60,000 was secured before the end of the first year. In four years after the secession to Rochester, the University and Theological Seminary were stronger in men and means than for many years previous to the conflict. The rapidity of the rise was astonishing to friends and all others. In the early part of the year of 1856 (January 6th), after nearly five years of vigorous administration (notwithstanding his lingering and painful illness during the latter part, through all which his powerful brain and indomitable will held the reins), Dr. Taylor died, lamented by all the friends of the University. (See under head of "Human Agents.") The succession was urged upon me. I did most sincerely decline even to entertain the question, and begged my friends to look elsewhere. I had no ambition in that direction, and was more than content with my assigned sphere. The subject was pressed again and again. It was said that public sentiment demanded my appointment, and I must yield to the wishes of my friends and the friends of the University. I finally consented to rest in this attitude: If the Board, unbiassed by external pressure, should deem it wisest and best for the interests of the University to appoint me to the Presidency, I would take the subject into prayerful consideration, but I did most earnestly desire a different arrangement. The Board made the appointment at their meeting in August, 1856, when I supposed the whole subject of the presidency had been deferred to a future day, and so was taken entirely by surprise. I sought for divine direction, and with humble trust in that direction entered upon the new responsibilities. For four years up to the opening of the war for the Union, the number of students remained much the same as under Dr. Taylor, and the general interests of the University prospered. At the opening of the third year of my administration there was a larger accession of students than ever before or since, some 80 during the first term. In 1859 there was a movement, into which I threw my whole soul, to secure Gov. Briggs as Chancellor of the University. A paper in regard to this movement, signed unanimously by my colleagues, declared that they favored the measure, from no want of energy and efficiency in the presiding officer of the University, but in concurrence with him, to secure the accession of a man of such conspicuous and commanding worth and influence to the controlling forces of the Institution. Influential friends in New York City and elsewhere pressed the matter upon the Governor's consideration. He became deeply interested in the question, though shrinking from acquiescence. He visited the Institution and declared himself highly pleased with its condition and prospects, and that no position could gratify him more, if he could believe he was the man for the place. This he could not see. I begged him to yield to the unanimity of all concerned. He replied modestly that he never recollected a case in his life when he had yielded to the wishes of others against his own convictions, that he was not convinced subsequently that he had made a mistake. He frankly confessed that no question that had ever been submitted to him had more deeply interested him, but if he could not be brought to see from his own point of view that he was the proper person to occupy the position, he must decline. The movement, therefore, failed. At the close of the Academic record of 1853, Prof. Turney resigned the chair of Biblical Interpretation and Criticism, which he had filled with earnest devotion and entire acceptance for three years, and on the 10th of November following, Rev. Ebenezer Dodge, of New London, N. H., was called to fill the vacancy. The war opening with the year 1861 seriously affected the University, mostly in the diminution of the number of students, but slightly in the integrity of its acting organism. The abstraction of over 50 young men with a professor and tutor to fight for their country, and the infrequency of additions from the same cause reduced the attending members nearly one-half. The decrease of members was due solely to the war, as the previous and subsequent history demonstrates. All the great institutions of learning in the land suffered more or less in the same way. In the winter of 1863 the President's health broke down, and he was threatened with a fatal malady—the consequence, as the physician declared, of an “over-worked brain.” He was advised to go abroad to arrest the morbid tendency. After an absence of a year he returned with restored health, but was anxious to retire from the Presidency, and pursue the more quiet and less annoying vocation of a theological instructor. It was thought by the most judicious friends of the University best for its interests that he remain in the office until a change could be made under more propitious circumstances. In 1865 the circumstances occurred in a large accession to the endowment, and he did most gladly tender his resignation as President of Madison University, reserving his position as President of the Theological Seminary, and Professor of Homiletics and Practical Theology. The Board accepted his resignation with the request that he would retain the Presidency of the University until his successor should be inaugurated. Complimentary resolutions of an unequivocally strong and emphatic character were passed by the Board in respect to the fidelity and efficiency of the retiring President. Prof. Osborn was associated with the President, more especially to take charge of the internal discipline of the University, and performed the difficult task with high credit. In 1860, Prof. William I. Knapp, an alumnus of the University, was appointed to the chair of Modern Languages, and for five years held it with distinguished favor, and then resigned to accept a similar position in Vassar College. Prof. Gallup, who had occupied the Greek chair from the year 1850, resigned in 1867. He was a superior Greek scholar, and rendered important service to the University. Prof. Andrews, the present incumbent, succeeded to the chair. In the spring of 1864, Dr. Harvey, who had occupied first the chair of Ecclesiastical History, and afterwards that of Biblical Interpretation and Criticism, resigned to assume the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Dayton, O. Rev. A. N. Arnold, D. D., an accomplished Greek scholar, was chosen to fill the vacancy, and entered upon his duties in the fall of the same year. He resigned in 1869, for a similar position in the Baptist Theological Seminary at Chicago. He has the well-earned reputation of an eminent Biblical scholar and exegete. The Board have recalled Dr. Harvey to the chair, and he has accepted the position. Recent events in the history of the enterprise are so fresh in the minds of its friends that they hardly need to be noted. Rev. Ebenezer Dodge, D. D., LL. D., acceded to the Presidency in 1868. Every chair in the University and Theological Seminary has been filled to general satisfaction, and under the most auspicious omens the whole enterprise enters upon its second half-century, with the determination on the part of its friends to carry it on and up, for God's glory and the advancement of his truth, to the amplest expansion and power.

THE HUMAN AGENTS.

I have thus far been giving a general record of facts, entwining occasionally comments with the thread of the record. I now proceed with some notices of the personal agents acting a prominent part in this eventful history. Facts and events are the exponents of the movements of intelligences, and are without meaning until the connection is seen between the outward act and the intelligent agent. It is no affectation when I say that I feel very inadequate to this part of my appropriate task. I can give but a few strokes for the representation of each agent and his work, and yet the lines must needs be so drawn, that some true likeness come out, otherwise the sketch will be worthless. It often happens that in the achievements of artistic genius the few first rough lines will bring out a likeness as readily recognized as the finished picture elaborated by thousands of the most careful strokes of the pencil. This is the prerogative of genius, to which I have no claim, and I fear I shall make a sad failure in this attempt at sketching out my conceptions.

I have, in a former part of this discourse, touched upon some general traits in the character of the first settlers of Hamilton, including the originators of the Baptist Education Society and their coadjutors. I need not repeat those touches here. They were remarkable men, and loom up to the eye of my retrospection, in the clear light of faithful memory, as men worthy of the most undissembled reverence and everlasting remembrance, for what they were and for what they did. It was my good fortune to know the most of them personally, when not my youth only, but a deep impression of their superior worth moved me to accord to them the most sincere and profound appreciation. The poet says " 'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view," but I am not conscious, at a distance of a quarter of a century since most of them passed to their eternal reward, of profounder respect to their memories, than I felt for their persons while moving among the living. They are before me as I gaze down the vista of the past generation, a group of grave and godly men of the most impressive aspect. Surrounding the immortal thirteen with look of warm sympathy and ready co-operation, I notice a Peck, a Bennett, a Beebee, a Hatch, the Munroes, father and son, the Burchards, and others.

These, and such as these, were not only the founders and the early friends of the Hamilton Institution, but they gave the mould, the character and the spirit, to the Baptist denomination of their time, and their influence still lives to animate us to deeds worthy of their example. They were nearly all of them men of stalwart physical frames. The Paynes were not tall, but solidly built and thickly set. The others, with the rest of the thirteen, averaged six feet in height, with large heads and high foreheads.

Dr. Kendrick was about six feet four inches, and towered among his brethren as Saul in Israel, though like him only in bodily height. His forehead was so high as to be a deformity, had not his frame been in due proportion. Take them together, this group of remarkable men in outward contour would have precipitated an enthusiastic phrenologist into "a fine phrensy." Their brains were of the largest volume, and were I a professor of the cranial science (which I am not), I should find no higher proof of the truth of the science than these men's heads afforded. Their intellects were broad, sound, sagacious and practical. They were well fitted to be legislators and counselors in a great, comprehensive and far-reaching movement. But their piety was the crowning excellence of the assemblage of noble endowments, deep, but not morbid, fervent, but not enthusiastic, earnest, but still conservative. Their whole nature was under the dominion of a sanctified sense of loyalty to God and his truth, and of a faith that took firm hold of heavenly things. Hence, they were men of singular unselfishness, ready to make any sacrifice of time and money, to do any service (without pausing to consider whether it might not compromise their dignity, personal or positional), that promised to advance the interests of the Redeemer's Kingdom. This is no random sketch and indiscriminate eulogy. Deacons Olmstead and Burchard were men honored by their fellow-citizens, by public and political preferment, and represented them in the Legislative Councils of the State. Both were large every way, body, brains, mind and soul.

Standing in advance of the general group of grave, earnest, saintly, and grand countenances beaming with benignity and benevolence, who that looks with me in this retrospection, does not see the noble forms of HASCALL and KENDRICK? How can I faithfully sketch these truly great and good men?

To Hascall is undoubtedly due, more than to any other one man, the origin of the Institution. The praise of founder, by common consent, is accorded him, but to Kendrick, more than to any other, is due the massive structure in its peculiar form as originally shaped and constructed. Both alike clearly comprehended and absorbingly felt the vast importance of the sacred enterprise; both gave their whole hearts to the work—nay, they lived in it and it in them. They embodied the Institution in their own individualities, and would have sacrificed their own lives for it, if necessary, to keep it in life and power.

These distinguished men, to whom we owe such an incalculable debt of gratitude, had very marked characteristic differences. Their intellects were of different order and habitudes of thinking, and their theology was not of the same school. Though both strong Calvinists, Hascall belonged rather to the General Atonement, and Kendrick to the Particular Atonement school. And yet I do not find the least intimation in all the records of these men in their intimate association as the principal instructors and workers for years in the school, of any strife, dissension or divided counsels. They were both decided and firm in their views, but not opinionative nor obstinate. They could gracefully yield when the majority was against them. They loved the truth most devoutly in the aspect presented to each, and spoke it out decisively and cleanly cut, but they moved together in their common work amicably and harmoniously, having "one mind and one way." Both had not only the gift of sound judgment as to what was demanded in a crisis, as well as in the ordinary progress of affairs, but also remarkable executive ability. Hascall was the more supple, lithe and diffusive in action, Kendrick more steady, slow and concentrative. Hascall's restless and impatient energy might drive him too far, and make it necessary to reconsider and review. Kendrick's energy was perhaps a mightier force, but never controlled his clear and comprehensive judgment. The result hardly ever failed to justify the correctness of his opinion, and the judiciousness of his action.

These men, indeed, might be said to be complements of each other during their direction of the school. I have said "Hascall was a man of diffusive action." I do not mean, by this, so spread out as to be inefficient—far otherwise—but as applied to many and various and almost incompatible objects. He was almost ubiquitous in the divers operations going on,—now in the recitation-room, solving a linguistical difficulty, and now in the quarry prying up materials for the building he was superintending, sitting on the sill of the raised window of his lecture-room, giving instruction to his class in one breath, and in the next giving orders to workmen outside. He was pre-eminently the man of action, forgetting self, and laboring incessantly for the great objects of his heart's desire. For a time he resided a mile out in the country, and yet, winter and summer, he walked in with lantern in hand, if too dark to see his way, at half past four o'clock in the morning regularly, to attend chapel service at five. What degenerate successors are we of such men! Dr. Kendrick was more the man of study and profound thought, but not wanting in action. Both were familiarly known and loved among the churches. They were present in all the public gatherings of the denomination,—Associations, Conventions, Councils—taking part, and making their personal influence felt in behalf of the Institution, and in the general ecclesiastical and benevolent movements in the denomination. Their services were constantly in requisition in councils and church difficulties.

Dr. Kendrick did more with his pen than Prof. Hascall; in fact he was the scribe of the enterprise. He was for a quarter of a century the corresponding secretary of the Board, and wrote its successive annual reports. These reports were carefully drawn up, and contained not only a resumé of the history of each passing year, but powerful pleas and arguments for the education of the ministry, into which he had thrown unreservedly his great soul. These reports collected in a volume would be a most valuable contribution to the literature of ministerial education, in addition to a faithful history of the Institution. He, also, through the Baptist Register, was ever and anon sending out to the denomination fervent and pressing appeals in behalf of the Institution, and was heeded as no other man would have been. In fact, he was the living bond between the churches and the "School of the Prophets," as he generally called the Institution.

This great and good man, after more than two years of intense suffering, from a fall on the ice, producing, his physician said, a lesion of the spine, and being literally consumed by pain, was relieved by his Master, and called home to rest in glory, on the 11th of September, 1848. The memories which cluster around his bed of long agony, are the most sacred and awe-inspiring of my whole life. God was pleased, in the early part of his illness, to manifest himself in a wonderful and overwhelming manner to his suffering servant. Dr. Kendrick was no enthusiast in his religious emotions. His piety was singularly free from irregular outbursts of feeling. It was ever calm and deep, altogether simple and rational. This divine manifestation, so clear, so glorious, so gracious, so assuring of his acceptance with God, was one of the most decisive proofs, that the religion of Christ is not a "cunningly devised fable." It was in mercy given, to sustain the man of God, through the years of exhausting agony that awaited him, and it did. The remembrance of that gracious visitation, and the divine help he experienced afterwards, made his dying room one of the most heavenly and cheerful spots I was ever permitted to enjoy. It was indeed a Bethesda, and the pious students who watched and waited with him felt it to be a privilege of unspeakable preciousness. He was always cheerful, and greeted me with smiling welcomes, when I knew by the contraction of his muscles he was suffering excruciating pain. When one said, "I wish I could offer you some relief, even by sharing your pain," he replied, with a smile, "I have no pain to spare. It is an inalienable gift from my heavenly Father, who is infinitely wise and kind, and I need the undivided use of it, in order to finish the preparation for my exit." Wonderful and triumphant Christian patience! Not a murmur escaped him during that long weary trial, not a harsh or unkind word towards those whom he believed to be tearing to pieces his beloved Institution, in which his great heart was bound up. He labored most earnestly to thwart their efforts to the last moments of his consciousness, and never did I feel more keenly the sacrilegious element of removal, than in listening to the pathetic and touching appeals of Dr. Kendrick and Mother Payne, to the Boards before their action, and I said to myself, "Surely good men will not trample upon such hearts, ripe for their home in heaven, and turn a deaf ear to their beseeching and plaintive voices, in a matter in which, of all persons living, they had a right to speak and be heard." Their voice was unheeded, though it came from heaven through them. I trust

God has forgiven these very good men. I believe he has, but the spirit that drove them to the deed could not have been from above. After removal was voted on, and thought to be triumphantly carried, I went to the bedside of Dr. Kendrick. "Well, Brother Eaton, what do you think of this?" "What do you think of it, Brother Kendrick? I want to hear your opinion." He replied: "It is all dark; I cannot see the hand of God in it." "Nor I," I said; "but what can be done? Would it be worth while to call a convention of the friends of this location?" He answered, with his eyes brightening, "I think it would, and circulars to that effect should be issued immediately." I soon rose to leave. "Stop, Brother Eaton, there is no time to be lost. Prepare the circular at once." I had to leave for a distant part of the State the next morning, but I replied, "I shall return in a few days. In the mean time, let us note what it would be proper to say in this circular, and compare notes on my return, and send out the call at once." "Very well, I will do my part." It was the last time my eyes rested upon that colossal man, great,—superlatively great in all his attributes of mind and soul. Intelligence met me on my way back, to hasten home to preach, at his desire, his funeral sermon; but it was too late. When I reached home, Dr. Kendrick's body was sleeping in yonder cemetery, and his spirit rejoicing in the presence of his Redeemer. Father Bennett providentially performed the service, requested by the dying man of me, his bosom-friend, and co-worker in resisting removal. But the remembrance of that last interview—what a well-spring of inspiration it was to me in the future of the terrible conflict! It was a voice from the sainted dead, urging me onward to do what I could to save the Institution.

Prof. Hascall died, June 28th, 1852, in Hamilton. He resigned his professorship in the Institution in 1836, and removed to Vermont, where he resided eleven years, until the fall of 1847, when he was invited to the pastoral care of the church in Lebanon, and removed to Hamilton. His return occurred contemporaneously with the opening of the removal controversy, and all through the strife he rendered the most essential service in breasting removal efforts. He was the only person after Dr. Kendrick, in and about Hamilton, who could properly stand forth as the legal representative of this location, and he boldly and firmly, though of singular mildness and amiability of spirit, took this stand in the courts. He knew the strength of the position. He felt, as no man living could, the moral and legal wrong of removal. The removalists knew he presented the most serious obstacle to their success; and after the vote to remove, he was personally plied with the most pressing appeals to abandon his position. Every consideration adapted to move a mind not immovably intrenched in the most solemn convictions of right and justice, was urged by brethren whom he greatly respected and loved. He listened calmly and respectfully to all that was suggested and pressed. He was finally told that "his opposition would be unavailing"—that removal was "a foregone conclusion"—a virtually accomplished fact—that he would only bring upon himself reproach and personal inconvenience and abandonment by his brethren in his old age, by holding out by virtue of untenable but vexatious legal technicalities against a favorite measure of the Baptists of the State—that the Institution itself would be abandoned and left to die, if it could be retained by such means—he had everything to lose, and nothing to gain by his factious course." He remained silent, seated at a table, with eyes cast down under these appeals. It was believed that a decided impression had been made, and that he had yielded. A pause ensued. He raised his eyes and his right arm, and brought down his clenched fist with startling energy upon the table, and slowly with unflinching voice and solemn emphasis, uttered these words, "IT SHALL NOT BE MOVED." The utterance was as the voice of God against the removal enterprise. It sealed its fate. Efforts were indeed continued. The case was carried into the courts (Daniel Hascall the leading plaintiff), and argued, as we have said, pro and con by the ablest counsel in the State. The legal objections were sustained, and Madison University fixed irrevocably in its present location. Now mark the result. Some of the very individuals who had vehemently pressed upon Daniel Hascall to give up his position, and were shocked at his audacious utterance, have thanked God and blessed the man for that utterance, and the firm and indomitable spirit that made it good against the fearful odds seemingly arrayed upon the other side. There is not a sublimer moral spectacle, than that of a man with a conscious sense of right and justice on his side, standing up, "firm as the surge-repelling rock," against all adverse influences of whatever kind and amount, though his own personal consideration and interest are in apparent peril of utter annihilation. These brave words of Hascall in that awful crisis sunk deep into the heart and memory of the alumni and friends of the old Institution. In view of the result, they accepted it as the voice of God through his honored servant; and when a monument was erected by these alumni and friends to the memory of Daniel Hascall, in the centre of the University cemetery on the hill overlooking the edifices which were raised under his own superintendence, it was deemed altogether fitting that the grand words he spoke out under such trying circumstances, into which so much of the peculiar spirit of the man was breathed, should be engraven conspicuously on the side of the shaft facing the edifices. And there, shall be read in honor of the memory of Daniel Hascall, by successive generations of alumni and friends through all coming time, and his memory be blessed in the reading: "Illa non movebitur." "It shall not be moved." In the midst of the hottest of the controversy, when his labors and anxieties seemed too great for a man of three score and ten, and apprehensions were expressed that he might suddenly break down under the pressure, he replied, "I shall live to see this conflict end and the Institution saved; then I shall die." This was prophetic.

These men of precious memory in the history of this enterprise both died beneath the shadow of the Institution, invoking heaven's richest blessing upon it. Kendrick died in the hour of its deepest darkness, but, as my last interview shows, still strong in the faith of its reviving fortunes. Hascall was preserved to see it rising in the renascent energy of a new life, and joined Kendrick in the realms of glory. Their glorified spirits, methinks, are looking down upon us now and rejoicing with us in the triumphs of this day.

I cannot name and commemorate in this discourse all who deserve, as generous patrons, the meed of grateful recognition, though it would give me heart-felt pleasure to do so. There are a few, however, whose friendship and services were so signal that I may individualize them without a charge of invidious partiality. Among the earliest and most useful was DEACON JONATHAN OLMSTEAD. On the 24th of September, 1817, the Society was organized in his house, as previously noted, and from that time to the day of his death, with the exception of a brief interval, he was a member of the Board, and of the Executive Committee. He was for years the President of the Board, and notwithstanding his growing bodily infirmities in his later years, his interest in the work of the Society never flagged. He was preëminently a pillar in the Church and Society of Hamilton, and distinguished for his power in prayer, doctrinal orthodoxy, living spirituality and deep religious experience. He presided for the last time at the semi-annual meeting of the Society in January, 1842, and in a touching address took leave of his brethren, as it was the last time he expected to meet them in the flesh. He suffered greatly during his remaining days with excruciating neuralgia, received a shock of palsy on the 4th of April, and fell asleep in Jesus on the 3d of May following, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. In the history of this Institution, the labors and counsels and offerings of Deacon Jonathan Olmstead hold a conspicuous place. "The memory of the just is blessed."

The name of Deacon SENECA B. BURCHARD is worthily coupled with the foregoing in the Church and Society of Hamilton, and in the counsels and work of the Education Society and the Institution.

He was not one of the original thirteen—not being a resident of Hamilton until the year 1826, but as early as 1822 he entered warmly into the enterprise (as did his father, JABEZ BURCHARD), and was regarded from that time onward as one of the main supports in council and in action. For ten years he served as Treasurer of the Society, and in 1846 was made one of the original Corporators of Madison University, and was chosen the Vice-President of the Board. He was also President of the Education Board, from 1842 to 1846. In 1858 he was again elected to the same office, and remained in it until February, 1861, when God called him home, in his seventy-first year. Deacon Burchard was no ordinary man. As we have said incidentally in another place, he was a strong man every way. He was eminently a good man, as well as honored and beloved in all the relations of life, wise in council, firm in all his convictions of right, and ready to make every reasonable sacrifice for the promotion of peace and harmony in Zion. His connection with any organization promotive of human good, was regarded as a guaranty of its efficient working. Unambitious of place or power, his friends and the community were ever urging upon him important responsibilities in Church and State, which he always discharged with ability and success. His name is associated with others that will never be forgotten while Madison University shall exist to bless the world with Learning and the Gospel.

Eminent among other patrons is the great and noble-hearted FRIEND HUMPHREY—long a prominent member of the Board of the Education Society, and the President of the Board of the University at the time of the secession to Rochester. He was claimed on the side of removal, but he never was a partisan, and personally had no heart in the controversy. And when the separation was effected he said emphatically, "Hamilton must be sustained. Both Institutions can flourish and do a great work in their respective fields." When he resigned his place in the Board of Madison University, he declared it was from no dissatisfaction toward Hamilton—he proposed to do the same in regard to Rochester, and for the same reason—his business would not permit him to serve either interest as he could wish. He continued, to his death, his gifts to Hamilton. His portrait properly adorns these walls. His sons have nobly followed his example in his friendship for the old Institution.

There is another name, the mention of which awakens the tenderest and most grateful memories of a warm personal friendship to me individually, (I never had a better friend,) as well as distinguished admiration and affection, as an enlightened and generous patron of Hamilton. Surely it is not necessary to name him. WILLIAM COLGATE will rise at once to every mind.

He comes into the history of the Institution as early as the year 1823, when a union was effected between the Education Society and a society formed in New York called the "Baptist Theological Seminary," to act in cooperation for the promotion of the interests of the Hamilton Institution. This union was one of the great eras of the enterprise. It brought into the number of its patrons besides the Colgates (four brothers, William, John, George and Bowles, of like mind and heart) such names as Gilbert, Purser, Maclay, Williams, Bleecker, Cone, Stokes, Caldwell, Raymond, Withington, Hunter, Stanford, Marsh, and many others, sisters as well as brethren. I find opposite the name of William Colgate, heading a long list, as his first subscription, $210, and followed in the like sum by Gilbert, Purser, Williams, Maclay, Raymond, Caldwell and Marsh, with others with less but liberal sums. This was a great day for Hamilton, and unbounded expressions of thanks to God and the brethren of New York are found in the report for that year. Henceforth New York City was a mine of rich resources to the Hamilton Institution, and William Colgate ever took the lead in its liberal contributions. His sagacious and practical mind and his pious and devoted heart comprehended and appreciated the inestimable value of the Institution to the ministry and the Church, and he took it to his inmost heart and made it to the day of his death one of the special objects of his generous bounty. I have heard him say that the Hamilton Institution could not be overestimated for its usefulness to the Baptist denomination. But not only his bounty, but his counsel, was an invaluable help to the enterprise.

He was great in counsel, in all difficulties in the church and in society. Again and again was he sent for to come up from his distant home to Hamilton to aid by his counsel and advice in trying emergencies. His sound and practical judgment, penetrated and imbued with the law of love and kindness, generally suggested a satisfactory solution. He was sent for in the unhappy difficulty between Dr. Maginnis and Elder Knapp, and never did I listen to a more pertinent, powerful, and melting appeal to the distinguished parties, than came from the lips of Deacon Colgate on that occasion. It broke us all down, and was enough to break a heart as hard as the nether millstone. He said that he regarded them both as eminently useful men to the cause of God, in their respective spheres, and they must cease, for the sake of that cause, their unhappy variance. It did bring those men together with tears and sobs and expressions of mutual forgiveness, and if they did not stay together, the wonderful effect was not less the demonstration of the power of this good man in one of the most trying cases of personal difficulty of which I ever had knowledge. Deacon Colgate was opposed to removal from the first. He saw no necessity for the measure, and apprehended only evil to the Institution from its prosecution. He fully sympathized with Dr. Kendrick and the rest of us in deprecating the effect of changing the policy of the University, as was contemplated by the leading and controlling removalists. He believed that it must necessarily wholly change its relation to the denomination. He was our counsellor through all the controversy, and when the measure was pressed to a decision, he spoke earnestly against it, and voted accordingly in the informal ballot by which the cause of removal was decisively lost.*

In a brief recess of a few minutes, there was a most extraordinary and unwarranted pressure brought upon him, as the representative and strongest man against removal, to waive his objections. An appeal was intensively addressed to the tenderest point of his nature—"The great majority of the denomination was for Rochester and determined to go there, and by holding out, he would only split and distract the body, leaving a small and inconsiderable fragment to rally round the sinking concern." He would have "to sustain it himself if it went on." He yielded for the moment, and on coming together he spoke kindly but firmly—that he yielded for the sake of peace, but his convictions were decided as ever against the measure! No wonder that the good man took hold anew with redoubled interest, of the Old Institution when relieved of the pressure of the direful conflict, and helped most powerfully to raise it again from its prostrate condition. He was in principle opposed to endowments, and held that the Institution would fare better to throw itself upon the hearts of the churches, and link itself with their good will and cordial sympathies. They would give to it all it might need. This had been good advice, had all had like mind with him and been as ready to give according to their ability. Notwithstanding, he gave two thousand dollars towards the first endowment of sixty thousand dollars, and would probably have continued such amount from year to year as his annual contribution, had it been asked of him. He died March 25th, 1857, after the keenest bodily suffering. Oh, how these good men suffer on their dying beds! It would seem that God so orders that there should be the greater contrast between earth and heaven in the glorious change on which they are soon to enter. Deacon Colgate was a Baptist of the strictest kind, but of kindest and most fraternal feeling to the whole of the household of faith. He left his large estate, accumulated in a long life of industry and simple living, to his children with the injunction to imitate his example of generous giving in the care and disposition of it. Were I not fearful of giving offence to the living, I would speak a word as to the fidelity with which the children have sacredly obeyed the dying injunction of the revered father. They have remembered the Institution so dear to him, by favors of extraordinary generosity. They have financially lifted both the University and Seminary up to a level with the strongest Colleges and Seminaries in the State. The broad and immovable foundations laid by them are amply sufficient to sustain the noblest superstructure which the resources of the denomination can rear. May many others be emulous of their example in the same way.

* The informal vote stood in the Education Board 12 against, 10 for removal. In the University Board 12 for and 6 against. As it required a majority of both Boards in the case, the measure was lost. This was the sentiment of the two bodies in conjunction. Nay, the vote did not cover the whole of the real sentiment. There were those who voted for removal who afterwards assured me, as I have said, that they were in heart opposed, but felt that it had come to be a painful necessity.

With the name of Colgate, that of GARRET N. BLEECKER should be gratefully mentioned. He died in the prime of manhood. The sun of his earthly life went down "ere it was noon," but he left behind him memorials of Christian benevolence placing him in the front rank, according to his means, of generous benefactors to the cause of Christ. He belonged to the best class of Christian merchants and men of business. When Dr. Spear and myself were endeavoring to raise the sixty thousand dollars of the first endowment (after the Rochester secession) we were advised by Deacon Colgate to call upon Mr. Bleecker. We did so, but were altogether uncertain of the result of our call. We were ignorant of his means and his feeling towards Hamilton. He received us courteously, and listened to our plea, and then asked if we considered sixty thousand dollars sufficient to ensure the continued life of the Institution. We replied in the affirmative. He said, he never had any sympathy with the efforts to remove it to Rochester. From the first they had seemed to him all wrong, and then he took our little book and went to his desk. Five hundred dollars was the highest sum in our expectation. He handed the book back with a subscription of three thousand—the highest subscription by a thousand we had obtained! Our surprise and joy you may conjecture. He subsequently gave twelve thousand dollars more, and with the fifteen thousand dollars endowed the Bleecker professorship of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy, thus indissolubly and for all time blending the name of Bleecker with Madison University.

Another most effective agency was the New York Baptist Register, under the editorial conduct of ALEXANDER M. BEEBEE, LL. D. Bro. Beebee was originally of Presbyterian family, and a graduate from Columbia College, in New York city. He studied law with the celebrated jurist, Judge Josiah Hoffman, then at the head of the New York bar, and had Washington Irving for his fellow-student. He commenced practice with brilliant prospects of assured success. He belonged, by birth and social position, to the aristocracy of intellect and wealth in the metropolis. When converted, however, he cast his lot, from strong and clear convictions, with the humble and democratic Baptists. He was in every way a man of broad intellect and generous culture, and, had he remained in his early associations, might have achieved a high position in his profession. He consecrated all his talents, resources and property to Christ, among a despised people. When the Register became the organ of the State Convention, in the year 1825, he was appointed its editor, and remained in that very responsible and influential position until a short time before his death, in Nov., 1856. The paper, when put into his hands, was 6 x 12 inches, of 8 pages. It increased to the largest sized sheet of the times. I need say nothing of its superlative merits, as a religious journal, to the great body of this assembly who enjoyed its invaluable matter and teachings. Bro. Beebee's character and spirit are so well known to thousands now living, both men and women, and his memory so freshly and lovingly cherished, that a sketch of his likeness is not needed. He was one of the noblest and gentlest of men, and a "burning and shining light" in our Zion. The Christian spirit he breathed through his editorials was an antidote to the bitterness of sectarian and social reform controversy which raged so furiously at times through the country during his editorship. He was firm in his own convictions, but was ever pouring the sweet oil of Christian love upon the troubled waters. How much he did to assuage the asperities of fraternal strife, and inculcate the maxims and spirit of the loving Saviour, the old alumni and friends here well remember. The Register, in his hands, was no war-bugle, giving the blast for the onset of battle, except against sin and error. Bro.

Beebee's memory should be cherished in our "heart of hearts" for the sweet "charities of the gospel" poured out over the denomination through the Register. As might be expected from his culture and devotion to Baptist principles, he took an early interest in the Hamilton Institution. In the first number of the Register published under his auspices, we find this sentence in his salutatory: "The interests and operations of our Institution at Hamilton are among the important subjects to which our regard is pledged." And the Register was ever true to this pledge. When it became his own property, we may say, it became the organ of the Institution as well as that of the denomination in the State. He was ever ready and happy to admit the appeals of its secretary and agents, and to advocate himself most earnestly its interests. I never knew of his charging anything for inserting appeals, communications, notices, or any other matter for the benefit of the Institution. I knew he was strongly opposed to removal, but in the peculiar relations of the parties to each other and to the denomination, he dealt equally and fairly with both. He made a fervent and eloquent appeal against removal at the Albany Convention, but was finally induced to favor the compromise, mainly on the ground that something in this way could be saved at Hamilton. But no one rejoiced more heartily than Bro. Beebee at the rising fortunes of the old Institution in all its entireness on its old ground.

Another name comes up here. It is that of my predecessor in the Presidency of Madison University—STEPHEN W. TAYLOR (magnum nomen). He had the well-earned reputation of standing in the very first rank of educators and disciplinarians. He graduated from Hamilton College (Clinton) in the year 1817 with the highest honors, being the valedictorian of his class. He entered, soon after, on his life work as an educator, as the Principal of Lowville Academy, and raised it to the highest rank of academic institutions. No academy in the State stood higher than Lowville Academy while under his principalship. In 1834 he accepted the principalship of the Academic Department of the Hamilton Institution. The Department at that time was considerably demoralized, from the want of adequate care occasioned by the paucity of instructors, and serious dissatisfaction prevailed among its pupils. Dr. Taylor revolutionized the whole Department, drew a clear line of distinction around it, with himself the controlling and independent head, brought order out of chaos, and organized a system of instruction and discipline of most admirable efficiency. In the year 1838 he was transferred to the professorship of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, for which his clear and methodical mind eminently fitted him. He resigned in 1845, to the great regret of Board, Faculty and students, and repaired, soon after, to Lewisburg, Penn., where a seat for a university was in contemplation. Through the resources of his mind and indomitable energy, he planned and put into operation, with others, that noble University, and remained at its head until he had carried the first class to its graduation. He was then called to the Presidency of Madison University in 1851, at the time slowly recovering from the blow of Removal. His very name was a tower of strength. No man in the denomination had a larger share of public confidence as an instructor and disciplinarian. His occupancy of the Presidency in a wonderfully short time restored the University to its former strength. In three years after his entrance upon the office, it rose in numbers to the palmiest days of its prosperity before the Removal storm. He died, Jan. 6th, 1856, at the age of 64, and by a singular coincidence from a similar cause—namely, a fall—to that of Dr. Kendrick. His wonderful energy and iron will refused to yield to his infirmities, and he continued to discharge his duties to within a few weeks of his death. Dr. Taylor's body sleeps in yonder cemetery on the hill. He was a man of great elements of character. Originally endowed with a huge mass of brains and a corresponding breadth of intellectuality that would have insured distinction in whatever sphere of mental activity he might have engaged, he chose as his vocation the profession of educator. There is no more honorable and useful profession, and his conscientious purpose and indomitable will made everything subserve this end, and so he attained to the highest eminence in this line.* He had, what few supposed from his singularly mathematical and methodical mind, the gift and inspiration of poetry, and successfully courted the muses in his early years. "Dr. Taylor a poet!" some may exclaim, who remember him. Yes, he was a poet; and the gift suppressed in himself for what he regarded as a higher and more useful vocation has reappeared in his sons. He was not ambitious of public demonstrations, and spoke but seldom in public, but always with pith and pertinency when he did. His recitation and lecture room was the chosen field of his power. Here was his "throne and sceptre" and unrivalled dominion. In short, Dr. Taylor was the synonym of massive and unadorned mental power. His character was a Doric pillar of marble for solidity and simplicity. He might have made it Corinthian or Composite, but he deliberately preferred to be solid rather than brilliant, to be useful rather than ornamental, and trimmed away all superfluities of mere grace and decoration, and stood forth in the grandeur of simplicity and utility.

There is another name still to add to the list. Deacon WM. COBB, whose portrait adorns these walls, was the meekest and most unassuming of men, and the loveliest and most exemplary Christian, on whose head honors had to be thrust, and it was hard to hold them there. He was the President of the Education Society during the Removal strife, and though the most self-deprecating of men, he rose in a "reserved might," and breasted the storm most courageously through all its blasts and howlings. He gave largely of his means to sustain the Institution in all its trials, and no one appreciated its value more than he. When he was smitten with a stroke of paralysis, and regarded his days as ended, I called on him, and was surprised at the energy and fervency of his expressions of interest and attachment to the Institution. With tears streaming from his eyes he said the time had come when he could do no more for it, but leave to it his blessing. He, in a measure, recovered from this severe blow, and for some time longer remained to give his prudent counsels. He died a triumphant death in the spring of 1864.

DEVOTED WOMEN.

There are still other coöperative agencies in the great work, less obtrusive, but hardly less influential, the commemoration of which, if omitted, would leave this history imperfect. Devoted women, mothers and sisters in Israel, from the beginning have borne a most effective part in the building of this sacred temple to God. The elder alumni gathered here to-day have not forgotten, nor ever can forget, BETSY PAYNE, wife of Deacon Samuel Payne, and SOPHIA HASCALL, wife of Prof. Hascall. The former was known in the early annals as the "student's mother," and the latter as the "student's friend." They were women of great strength and excellence of character, and of devoted and lovely piety. They took as much interest in the enterprise as their husbands, and were emphatically—in prayers, counsels and labors—their efficient helpmates. They worked assiduously with their own hands for the comfort of the students, sympathized and counselled with them in all their straits and trials, and encouraged and cheered them in their times of discouragement and despondency. Their example was imitated as far as circumstances allowed, by hundreds of others throughout the State. Female societies, associated for the purpose of aiding the Education Society, were multiplied in city and country. Needles, sewing and knitting, were busily plied by old and young, money and clothes and other needed articles were collected and forwarded, rooms furnished, and in countless ways women's hearts and hands all over the State were engaged in praying and working for the "School of the prophets." I cannot refrain from naming in this connection, Mrs. DEACON COLGATE. She, like her husband, took the Institution into her heart, and was in labors abundant, to supply its wants, and the necessities of the students. She was evermore busying herself about the Hamilton Institution, gathering funds, endowing scholarships, furnishing rooms, and in other ways contributing efficiently for its benefit. The Female Society in the City of New York, auxiliary to the Education Society, was for years, through her agency and that of others, a bountiful source of help to the Institution. Simple justice to the facts of history require, along with the mention of the mother's name, that of her daughter SARAH, who was, in full sympathy and kindred work, a true yoke-fellow with the indefatigable mother, and when the latter's illness laid her aside, went on bravely with work for Hamilton. She was a remarkable instance in which physical infirmity, that would have seemed to justify an entire cessation from bodily labor, was not allowed to interfere with ceaseless activities for the advancement of benevolent objects in the family, church, and society. In all these she was a "burning and shining light." So deep was her interest in the Institution, that she came to visit it, to attend its exercises, and inspect its rooms and general condition for herself, notwithstanding the peculiar inconveniences to her of travel. She was greatly endeared to many of the students who had enjoyed her counsel and encouragement and good offices in her father's house. She richly deserves special mention among the sisters who effectually served the cause of ministerial education at Hamilton. Mrs. HULDAH THOMPson, of Troy, whose portrait looks benignly upon us from these walls, was also a liberal patron of the School, and deserves grateful mention in this history. She endowed two scholarships, besides giving generously in other ways. Others also deserve mention commemorative of their deeds of beneficence. But time fails me to speak of the Dorcas, Priscillas, Chloes, Loises and Eunices who were fellow-helpers in the cause. They are remembered, though time fails to record their names and deeds. Their "record is on high." If the hands of men have given strength and solidity, the hands of women have given grace and beauty to the noble structure we this day celebrate.

THE ALUMNI.

Finally, under the head of Human Agents, I must speak emphatically of the alumni themselves. In the early history of the Institution we have seen that the personal character, work and influence of the alumni as "living epistles," sent forth by their Alma Mater, successfully conciliated the confidence and attachment of the churches toward her. They naturally inferred that the tree that produced such fruit must be good and worthy to be nurtured and cherished by their warmest affection and care. The providential fact that the first fruits were offered to God on the altar of Missions, in the persons of Wade and Kincaid, soon to be followed by others whose "praise is in all the churches" and throughout the realm of Christian Missions, served most effectually to render the Institution sacred in the sight of the whole denomination, and to draw to it the respectful regards of the lovers of missions generally. As a body, the alumni have ever been loyal to their Alma Mater. Many of them, indeed, favored removal, but only as a measure, which, in their view, would aggrandize the Institution they loved, and when it was determined it could not be moved, and that hostile influences were set to work to destroy it, most of them rallied with new devotion and enthusiasm to its defence and support. There is a sacred and significant incident connected with the doings of loyal alumni in that hour of darkness. It perhaps ought to be reserved for mention under the head of "Special Providences," but as the alumni were the principal actors, it comes in appropriately here. It was spread about very confidently, and no doubt sincerely, by those in the interest of removal, that the Old Institution could not live after the secession. It would be left to die and be buried on the ground on which it had been forced to remain by the strong arm of the law. That was all that the friends of the location could get by their "factious resistance" to removal. Indeed, "it was a virtual removal." "All worth anything had been secured. The old, dilapidated, rickety buildings would be all that remained to tell that there ever was an Institution at Hamilton. The commencement of 1850 was to be the last held at Hamilton, and that would be a small affair. It was to be the last dying throes of old Hamilton." But in this they overreached. The anti-removal alumni, to the surprise of both sides, came up in unusual numbers, with sad and heavy hearts, to attend the funeral of their cherished Alma Mater, and see her decently buried. They were prepared, as the devout men of Jerusalem in respect to Stephen, "to carry her to her burial, and make great lamentation over her." Now mark what occurred. These mourning sons gathered round the prostrate and pallid form of their mother, bleeding at every pore from the cruel blows she had received, and assuring themselves there was yet life and restoration possible, they tenderly lifted her up, and wiped away the crimson stains streaming from her brow, and administered restorative cordials, and, lo! she looked up and smiled upon them in renewed life and benignity. This, it may be said, is florid fancy; but it does not reach the fact. Hear the plain prose of this matter. These noble men gathered together in the Baptist church to consider the condition of the old Institution. They could not give it up to death. They saw that there was yet life, and felt that it must be preserved and perpetuated, if within the range of possibility.

There were representatives at that meeting from many successive classes. John Newton Brown, one of the earliest alumni, a name dear to every Baptist throughout the land, whose blessed memory still exhales the richest aroma of a holy and heavenly life, was called to preside, and after a prayer which seemed to go right up to the throne of God, he poured out his whole soul in "thoughts that breathed and words that burned." He spoke of his own indebtedness to his Alma Mater; how when a poor boy, in his early teens, she took him to her bosom and nursed him with maternal tenderness. He rehearsed her early history, and recounted the sacred memories of the past, and declared that such an Institution had an immortal life and could not die. He seemed to be inspired of Heaven. Others caught his inspiration and followed in the same strain until the whole assembly, as one great heart, heaved and throbbed with strange and undefinable emotions of filial love and tenderness to their Alma Mater. Under this feeling, inspired, I believe, by a gale from the heavenly hills, these alumni solemnly pledged themselves and their churches to stand steadfastly by their Alma Mater, and abide her fortunes "through evil and through good report." I witnessed this thrilling scene, not only with unspeakable joy, but with solemn awe. To me it was fraught, not alone with moral sublimity, but with divine pathos as well. I was called on to speak, but I could speak only in broken sentences. I recall some fragments of that short address. I said, quoting the words of a greater man under similar circumstances of another Institution, declared to be dead by its enemies, that if the Institution was dead, as was affirmed, "it was the most beautiful corpse I ever beheld," and then occurred to my recollection that magnificent stanza of the Christian poet, which I pronounced as I cannot now, for my deeply stirred spirit was poured into it :

"See truth, love and mercy in triumph descending,
And nature all glowing in Eden's first bloom,
On the cold cheek of death smiles and roses are blending,
And beauty immortal awakes from the tomb."

There have been many saviors of the old Institution, either self-styled or pronounced so by others. It has no single Saviour but God, who used various agents for the purpose, some for this kind of work, and some for that. In a vast complicated machinery, many different parts may be termed essential in the sense of their necessity to the right working of the whole combination. But, if called on to point to a single event as an index to the turning tide in the history of the downward course of affairs, and an earnest of a glorious future, I should point to the extraordinary demonstration of the Alumni on that memorable night. It decided the Board to proceed at once, to complete arrangements to go on with the affairs of the University and Theological Seminary, confidently relying on the solemn pledges of sympathy and co-operation by such a body. I was permitted, in the providence of God, to do something to defeat removal, and save the Institution from its disastrous effects. But, beloved alumni, gathered on that night and gathered here to-day, with your ranks broken—(John Newton Brown is in heaven, and others of that sacred band are with him)—I lay any claims I have on that score at your feet. It was you that saved your Alma Mater on that ever-to-be-remembered night. After all my exhausting labors, with those of faithful co-workers through years of weary conflict, seemed likely to prove vain, you did it, or rather it was God through you. You put your shoulders to the falling fabric, and in the strength of the divine arm, restored it to its original firmness and stability. This leads me to pass to the last group of facts in order.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCES.

The whole history is so marked by these providences that the Institution has been well named in the record of the past—"the child and nursling of Divine Providence," and no less conspicuous are those providences in the course and results of the removal controversy than in any portion of its history. Perhaps they are more crowded in this short period, than in any other of greater length. What a wonderful record would that be, which should fully and clearly show the revelations of the Divine hand through the fifty years of the history we are briefly sketching. I can give but a few examples.

In the year 1826, when the Western edifice was in the course of erection, the funds for the purpose failed and could be replenished from no known source. The workmen became impatient for their wages and refused to go on. Professor Hascall who had charge of the work and felt the vital importance of its speedy accomplishment, sought counsel and sympathy, as usual in difficulties, from his peerless wife. They betook themselves to prayer, and continued their supplications through most of the night. Now see what came of their "strong crying and tears." Dr. Stephen Gano, of Providence, R. I., came unexpectedly on a visit to Hamilton, to inquire into the condition of the affairs of the Institution, personally knowing but little previously about it, and gave as the cause of his visit the following strange occurrence. Nicholas Brown, that noble Christian philanthropist, whose munificence to Brown University had given his name to that venerable Institution, came to him at the close of an evening prayer-meeting and said, "I have had no enjoyment of this meeting. I could not sleep last night for thinking about Hamilton. I have been much exercised in relation to it. I do not know but that I have some duty to do there. I wish you would go and see what they are doing and ascertain if they are in special need of assistance." On the return of Dr. Gano, Mr. Brown immediately sent his check for a thousand dollars for the new Edifice and the work went rapidly on. Was not that as much an answer to prayer as in the case of Cornelius and Peter?

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

He heard the agonizing cries of his servant and hand-maid at Hamilton in the still watches of the night, and He put his finger on the soul of Nicholas Brown five hundred miles away and troubled him about Hamilton, and from that unexpected source the needed relief came.

Other instances may be related of a similar character. I have myself witnessed remarkable things of this kind both with the Board and students. I have seen the Board of the Society in great depression and perplexity—the treasury exhausted, liabilities accumulating—students leaving for want of means, and others coming, turned away. Under the oppression they have bowed down in supplication, and led by such men as Deacon Olmstead, a man mighty in faith and prayer, they have cried together "out of the depths" and were heard. A sense of relief was given, and they have risen from their knees with brightening faces. Some one would rise and say, "Brethren, it has occurred to me that such a measure would meet the exigency." All would respond "Yes, that is it, the same has occurred to us," and the measure would be adopted unanimously, and the Board would adjourn with light hearts under the assurance that means would be forthcoming, though not a dollar was yet visible. The means would come, often from wholly unexpected sources. And so as to students in great straits. The private histories of such in their course at Hamilton have been illustrated by remarkable answers to prayer. Most affecting have been such instances coming within my personal knowledge.

Passing over other things of this kind, I come to note some special "Providences" connected with the "removal controversy." This was the crucial crisis in the life of the Institution, and fully justifies my long history of the events appertaining to it. The vital—the "life and death" significance of the events obviates the necessity of apologizing for the space covered by the record, long as it is. Why that awful convulsion was permitted, we may perhaps now see in the light of subsequent disclosures. What do I mean by a "special providence?" God is especially present at all times in the movements of human affairs. When, however, there is a singular conjunction or striking coincidence of events originating, or essentially connected with, a train of consequences, deeply affecting the destiny of individuals or Institutions, which no human sagacity could foresee, or human agency of itself bring about, we say that is a special Providence. There is unmistakably the "finger of God." Now we believe that the singular conjunction of two events, namely, of Prof. Hascall's return to reside at Hamilton after eleven years of absence, and the origin of the removal movement, was a special providence to thwart the measure. The events were almost precisely contemporaneous, though Hascall knew nothing of the latter at his coming. He was the founder or preëminently one of the founders of the Institution, and so the only competent person living, after Dr. Kendrick, to represent the present location in a suit in the high courts of law. God saw that in the madness of the coming strife, moral considerations would be impotent to arrest the lawless proceeding. The "powers that be ordained by him" would be demanded in the awful crisis. He called his servant from Vermont back to Hamilton to stand in the final breach, to save from ruin the Institution which he had the immortal honor to found and help to rear. He fearlessly and determinedly cast his whole soul into the strife, exhausted the moral argument, and when that failed, utterly disregarding all reproach and obloquy, he did with unflinching firmness persistently push the case to a final decision in the high court of impartial law. This was Hascall's mission in that tremendous conflict. It was essential. Others could talk and write, argue and plead, and wield all the forces of logic and rhetoric as well as he. He alone had the right to clothe himself in the panoply of irresistible law and organized justice.

Again, when the edict of the Supreme Court had been uttered, the brethren in Hamilton who had been waiting for the legal issue before adopting measures for raising funds absolutely necessary for resuscitating and starting anew the enfeebled enterprise, met and appointed a committee to draw up a subscription as a basis to start upon. The committee deeply felt the responsibility of the crisis, and nobly met it by subscribing themselves on the spot $7500 for the beginning of an endowment. The record says, "God seemed to be present, tears were shed, and prayers offered." Now the coincidence here is that this meeting at the beginning of the "regeneration" consisted of just seven; the same number that met thirty-three years before at Deacon Samuel Payne's, anterior to the formation of the Education Society, to consult about founding the Institution. This in itself may seem a trifle, but the notice of the coincidence touched the hearts of the brethren, and they accepted it as an omen of success, as if "the still small voice" was saying "in like manner as I have blessed the enterprise of the original seven, I will abundantly bless yours."

Further, there was a most impressive and affecting manifestation of the Divine Presence at the meeting of the Boards when the "Albany Compromise" was declined. Especial grace was needed in this trying hour. There was an unusually full meeting, and a number had been inclined to accept the compromise as the best and perhaps the only thing for the friends of Hamilton. They prayed most earnestly for Divine direction. They felt willing to follow that direction whatever might be their own preferences. After a full, earnest and solemn consideration of all the elements and bearings of the question, they were brought to a unanimity of view not shadowed by a single doubt. "The whole Institution must remain in its integrity as the Providence of God had shaped it, on the old ground." Their official and moral responsibility absolutely forbid their consent to its disruption. This cordial unanimity they believed to be due to divine influence and direction, and with awed and melting hearts, in the sublime confidence of the faith of the dead founders, they committed the interests of the sacred enterprise anew to the care and blessing of Him, who out of the weakness of man, makes His own strength perfect. On his way home, Deacon Colgate, as he told me, met a friend at Utica who said, "How dared the Boards at Hamilton to disobey the voice of the denomination, expressed through the Albany Convention?" He meekly replied, "We dared not do otherwise. We must obey the voice of God rather than the voice of the denomination. He is wiser and stronger than man. The voice of the denomination will in the end answer to the voice of God." And so it has proved. The cry of the "voice of the denomination" in favor of removal has been demonstrated by stubborn facts to have been a most fallacious and misleading assumption.

Once more, was there no divine intimation of good to Hamilton in the fact that the first graduating class here after the separation was a missionary class, as was the case at the beginning? It consisted of two, Biddle and Burnett. The hearts of both were given to the work of missions among the heathen. Biddle was mysteriously called to his heavenly home just as he was on the eve of sailing. Burnett's purpose was changed by circumstances not under his control. But mark how the mystery of Biddle's death was in some measure solved. It determined others to step forward and fill the breach. A number of brethren at Hamilton were proximately led by Biddle's death to consecrate themselves to foreign missionary labor, for which his fervent soul so burned and panted. God spoke in this coincidence. The restored Institution was to be continued and blessed as a school for missionaries to the heathen.

I pause here in my responsible task. Enough has been said, though a tithe has not been told, to vindicate the claims of the Hamilton Institution to the highest honor and deepest love of all her old and new friends gathered here on this auspicious day to celebrate her fiftieth anniversary. And now in closing, I trust I shall be pardoned for presuming to address a few personal remarks to Alumni, Boards and Patrons.

BELOVED ALUMNI: All hail to this Semi-centenary of your Alma Mater! You have in her name been welcomed in fitting words to her house and home as the children of her love. I have nothing to add to that welcome. Words refuse to convey to you the profound emotions which stir in my bosom on this occasion; and I doubt not, you are more or less subjects of feelings to whose expression no language is adequate. You have, after years of absence, many of you, come up from your several fields of toil, to renew your vows of loyalty and devotion to your Alma Mater, and to lay your offerings of filial love at her feet. What a throng of fond, tender and sacred associations must crowd upon your hearts pressing through the long avenue of receding years! Some of you went forth to your life's solemn work, in the days of "long ago," and present yourselves now as hoary veterans from the battle-field of the world where you have nobly fought and won. Others are in the prime of manhood with the marks of hard service, and the scars of strenuous conflict with the powers of darkness on your manly fronts, and still others in the buoyancy of youthful energy and hope, but crowned already with the laurels of early victories. You are all here with the same mind and soul, to bear living witness to your unabated attachment for your Alma Mater, and to crown her with the chaplets of your heart's devotion. The filial attachment of alumni for the Institution in which they have received the rudiments of their mind's life and growth, is the richest treasure it can possess. The vital warmth of such attachment has revived and reanimated Institutions when apparently in the gasp of death. We have noted a signal instance of this in the present history. From her "heart of hearts" your Alma Mater thanks you for all your love and service in the past. She relies upon you for the future. She is just as worthy of your confidence and love now as ever. Nay, in all the resources, material and mental, which command respect and confidence from Patrons and the public generally to an Institution of Learning, she is to-day richer and more powerful than in all the past of her fifty years' history. The future fortunes of your Alma Mater are ensured. She will remain a power in the land, but how great, mighty and grand that power may be must depend vitally upon your continued loyalty and effective service in your several spheres. She cannot live and flourish without you. You are an integral part of her. You and she are one in interest, purpose and work. Let this day reinvigorate the vital bond. I pledge to you the warm undying affection of your Alma Mater, as of old, so now and forever. And I charge you, gather from this day's doings around the "old hearthstone," new inspirations of love, gratitude and devotion to that venerated and loving mother, to carry back with you to your homes and centres of personal influence. Be ever prompt to commend, defend and aggrandize her. You who are pastors, send the sons of your churches, and your own sons, to drink at the fountains where you have drunk such healthful and inspiring draughts of knowledge and rich experience, and to enjoy the smiles, caresses and blessings of the same mother, who has so richly blessed you.

GENTLEMEN OF THE BOARDS OF TRUST: "Others have labored, and you have entered into their labors." The legacy they have bequeathed to you is of priceless value. No body of men have received in trust an interest more sacred and precious. It comes to you bearing not only the "image and superscription" of men of God of the noblest stamp, but as moulded by a Divine hand, and fragrant with the breath of Heaven. You are charged with the grave responsibility of preserving, in its original integrity and purity, the inheritance transmitted, and also of enlarging, developing and applying to the widest extent within the limits of your resources, the capabilities of the capital in your hands. To meet this responsibility, you have special need to inherit the spirit as well as the estate of your predecessors. You must robe yourselves in the mantles they dropped when they ascended to heaven. They were eminently distinguished for two moral qualities, without which no one is fitted to take a leading part in carrying on a great enterprise, especially when beset with formidable difficulties, namely: Faith in God, and Faith in the Enterprise itself. They communed with God and received the promise of success. Nothing henceforward could quench or daunt the ardor of pursuit. They could walk on firmly in the dark, and work and wait, assured, if man failed, the faithfulness of God could not. There is nothing more essential to efficiency in any enterprise of man, than confidence in its ultimate success. Distrust on this point unfits for effective co-operation and turns a help into a hindrance.

BRETHREN OF THE BOARD OF THE EDUCATION SOCIETY: You are charged with the care of theological education, and the support of the rising ministry in their preparation for their sacred vocation. In view of the transcendent importance of the object, you cannot feel too deeply your responsibility. It is a cheering sign of the times that the churches are giving greatly increased attention to this object, and are appreciating its imminent necessity beyond anything of former example, though still far from reaching an adequate measure of interest. All that is good and hopeful in the movements of the church and the world, is connected directly or indirectly with the work of an able and faithful ministry of the Gospel of the Grace of God. The world is to be converted and the dark kingdom of error and sin overthrown and demolished more by this agency than all others combined. On a powerful, faithful and devoted ministry, the destinies of the world hang to-day. "By the foolishness of preaching, God is pleased (as much to-day as ever) to save those who believe." This is His immutable ordination until the consummation of the scheme of human redemption.

GENTLEMEN OF THE BOARD OF MADISON UNIVERSITY: You are charged with a twofold responsibility in the great educational system with which you are officially connected. 1st. You are bound by solemn compact to the Education Society to maintain a course of education in the University adapted to the wants and demands of the Christian ministry. You are co-workers with the Society in the prime object of its constitution. They have entrusted to you not only to sustain, so long as your relation to them exists, a suitable course of intellectual training for students enjoying their patronage, but to provide for them the best instruction, and all other accommodations and facilities necessary to make available the highest practical results of the instruction given. You share in an eminent degree the sacredness of the Society's trust, and you must not fail, with God's help, to be faithful to your charge. 2d. You are charged by the State which has given you ample charter powers and authority for the purpose, to make the University one of the prime agencies in promoting the common cause of Literature and Science. I need present no considerations to quicken your zeal on this behalf. The princely munificence of some of your number has already laid deep and broad the foundations of a noble University of the first class, which ensures a superstructure of grand and magnificent proportions, not inferior to any in our country. Let that superstructure, by the imitation on the part of others of the example so nobly set, be continually rising towards the zenith of the moral heavens.

A word to patrons, and I have done. If I have been even in a small degree true to history in my sketch of this seat of learning, you will respond: "It is eminently worthy of our patronage. It is an honor to be its friends and supporters. We will take it to our hearts, and cherish and nourish it up to the highest perfection of which it is capable." The patrons of this Institution in its twin character of a University and a Theological Seminary are Baptists, almost without exception. From its peculiar relation to the Baptist ministry and churches, identified with them in its origin and history, instituted by and for Baptists, it has no special claims upon the patronage of other denominations, and we make no appeal to them. All the claims we may have upon them are found in the rich and ample provisions we furnish for the best instruction in literature and science. We cordially welcome their sons to these provisions, and the University has always had in its number of students representatives from other denominations. But we shall firmly maintain the right, privilege, and practice of being out-spoken Baptists in all relations official and personal, of managers and instructors, throughout the whole enterprise—not in any narrow sectarian sense, but in honest loyalty to the Truth of God as we hold it, and in generous Christian charity to all who “hold the Head.” We now submit the whole case of this sacred enterprise—its Theological Seminary and University, with its divinely guarded and thrilling history, its present conditions, relations and prospects—to the consideration of its special patron, and the whole denomination. Wonderful as is the past, inspiring as is the present, we believe the future is fraught with hopes of an expansion, amplitude, power, and wide-spreading influences for the highest good to our denomination and the world, which will be to the past as the midday sun to the brightening dawn. There is no limit to its progress across the vista of coming time, on which is inscribed the divine fiat, “Thus far shalt thou come and no further,” but rather, voices from heaven are speaking, “Onward and upward now and forever until the millennial morn breaks upon a redeemed world!” I may be deemed over-enthusiastic, but in closing I must be allowed to say, that the eye of my mind kindles, and my spirit exults to-day in the prospect of the future destiny of this God-sanctioned enterprise. My prospective gaze rests upon a vision of grandeur and glory—this beautiful hill consecrated by the prayers and footsteps of holy men, crowned with noble edifices of imposing architectural simplicity and beauty glittering in the earliest rays of the rising sun, and reflecting the latest splendors of his golden setting, with surrounding grounds adorned with all the appliances of tasteful art blended with the rich profusion of nature’s bounteous hand, where every branch of useful knowledge shall have a home and an altar, and anointed priests at every altar feeding their sacred fires, and all working together “Deo ac veritati,” for God and His truth, making the whole a glorious union of the highest learning with the deepest piety—a light to enlighten the nations, and the glory of our Israel. Patrons and friends! the realization of the vision rests with you and your successors.

JUBILEE POEM

BY

REV. WILLIAM C. RICHARDS, A. M., P. H. D.,

CLASS OF 1840.

RETROSUM.

A POET'S song, the festival to grace,
Keeps now, as in the olden time, its place;
A measure light, like dessert after meat,
Quick to digest, if profitless to eat;
A round of rhymes, like grapes whose nectar drips
Its fresh delight on pleasure-sated lips;
Bubbles of breath, like ruby-beaded wine,
That heavy eyes from sleeping woo to shine:
A poet's song, thus framed, is just the thing,
I come upon the stage (ten miles!) to sing.

If but in Greece this wood-crowned hill arose,
Or eke the stream that through yon valley flows,
Parnassian strength and sweet Castalian grace,
Blent in my song, you'd fitly seek to trace;
But these green heights Apollo's feet ne'er trod;
The lovely Nine ne'er danced upon their sod;
No Delphic frenzy in their bosom burns,
That common breath to inspiration turns,
Nor any muse, invoked beneath their shade,
The laboring bard could hear or give him aid.
Ask then of me no lays the gods inspire,
I give you Saxon hail and not Greek fire.

And "WELCOME" first! Match me this Saxon word,
By any phrase Hellenic ever heard;

Match me its force, with honest fervor fired,
 By any thought of Helicon inspired.
 This hearty word, this "Welcome," here to-day,
 Who than your bard has better right to say?
 Welcome, ye sons, in Alma Mater's name.
 Aye, welcome all, to share or swell her fame,—
 With happier pride than erst she ever knew,
 With wider arms, she bids me welcome you!
 In other years she called you to her feet,
 And answering scores received her greeting sweet;
 To-day she calls, and legions climb the height,
 Where stands her shrine all lovely in our sight;
 Her sons fresh girt with armor from her walls,
 Others who bring fair trophies for her halls,
 And graybeards more, who at their mother's beck,
 Come back to fling their arms around her neck;
 While here and there are heads so reverend grown,
 As fathers, more than sons, of all they're known.
 Yet their white locks and thin, like tattered flags,
 Attest the love that ne'er in fealty lags.
 A thousand sons, and from a thousand fields,
 Bearing rich spoils upon their well-worn shields.
 Not spoils of blood, not rapined gems and gold,
 And seldom wealth, in glittering symbols told;
 But in God's book, I rede ye, tears and toils,
 Patience and prayers, are counted priceless spoils!

Whence come ye not at this auspicious time?
 This to unfold would burden less my rhyme,
 Than the dim paths of distance which your feet,
 Or slow or swift, have trod ere thus we meet.
 In your glad smiles to-day are mirrored bright,
 Of all earth's skies some stolen rays of light;
 With tropic glare the northern twilights fuse,
 And morning's glow melts into sunset's hues.
 "No pent up Utica" suffices you,
 (Save for an hour or more, as you came through);
 But this, "whole boundless continent" and more,

Your toils enrich, your eager feet explore ;
 Yet, far or near, your Alma Mater's hill
 O'ertops the Alps and proves your Mecca still.
 Pilgrims of joy ! the call you heed to-day,
 Binds you but once on Time's swift-trodden way.
 It has not been ; it shall not be again,
 While drop apart the links of Life's frail chain,
 That here we keep, with mingled smiles and tears,
 High festival of fifty rounded years.

Alumnus O beatus ! be there one
 So young this happy day to see its sun,
 Who yet shall live the vision to behold,
 When fifty years by two for one are told,
 Of Alma Mater's growth and glory great,
 Crescent and crowned with a full century's state ;
 That shall her fame to-day, eclipse as far
 As sunlight whelms the glimmer of a star :
 When here at once a thousand sons are nursed,
 And by ten thousand tongues, with pride, rehearsed
 Her just renown for classic lore, nor less
 For secret laws which Nature's lips confess ;
 When men shall count it honor to endow
 Her thronging chairs, and nevermore, as now,
 Be chiefly heard our Alma Mater's sighs
 Of need, that swell to (thousand) dollarous cries.
 Your rich largess, COLGATE and TREVOR,¹ flows
 With healing balm for her pecunious woes ;
 And kindred gifts in scores or decades told,
 Would usher in her happy "age of gold."

Are there to-day those happy eyes that see
 Our Alma Mater's fair prosperity,
 Which saw through clouds her little struggling star,
 But dared not hope 'twould shine so bright and far ?
 Too deep their joy for other sign than tears,
 Seeing what God has wrought in fifty years !

It was God's work ; man's patience and his strength
 Had wearied both, if tried at such a length ;
 Harvest so slow his hands had left to spoil,
 Had not the Lord inspired and crowned his toil !
 Honor unspared to those great-hearted ones,—
 Our Alma Mater's fathers, not her sons !
 A radiant band, remembered as "THE SEVEN,"
 Who living less for self and earth than Heaven,
 Thought, prayed and toiled, and wept, and freely spent,
 And built of all their loss this monument.
 Honor be theirs ; immortal every name,
 And unto God the glory all the same.

No Pleiad group, these starry names I ween,
 For looking yet again, we count thirteen ;
 More like the stars our flag's blue baldric bore,
 When first it waved this land of freedom o'er ;
 Thirteen true souls, in league for noble ends,—
 Of God and man and sacred learning friends,—
 Planted a germ, a mustard-seed of faith,
 Watered with tears and fanned by praying breath,
 Which grandly grown, a tree of Knowledge stands,
 And yields its fruit for near and distant lands.
 And in the shade of this symbolic tree,
 Our hearts and tongues are keeping jubilee.

I pray you all a little legend heed,
 Legend, I say, but it is true indeed :

Upon this classic hill-side stood,
 A hundred years ago,
 A tree than whose, wide leagues of wood
 No kinglier crest could show :

A stately elm of wondrous girth,
 And triple arms outflung ;
 Whose shadows half a rood of earth,
 Like giant clouds o'erhung.

Erelong the startled valley broke,
 In echoes far and wide,
 From the swart settler's lusty stroke,
 Scarring the elm-tree's side.

The fatal axe its grandeur felled,
 And laid its proud head low ;
 Nor pitying eye the ruth beheld,
 Nor quivered with each blow.

Yet in the godly woodman's soul,
 He nursed a holy aim :
 To till the ground and gain his dole,
 In God's most blessed name.

And kneeling in the elm-tree's shade,
 Its deep-scarred heart anear,
 A solemn vow to Heaven he made,
 With Heaven alone to hear :

“If on my toil and tilth shall fall
 God's increase and His smile,
 To Him again I'll render all,
 With joyful heart the while.”

The forest fell beneath his hand,
 His seed brought sixty fold ;
 Peace crowned his hearth and wealth his land,
 While thirty years were told.

The good man's wife his vow had shared,
 Tender of heart and true ;
 Since God for him and her had cared,
 Their debt to God was due.

All their broad lands, with one sweet will,
 They gave to God again :
 These verdant fields, this wood-girt hill,
 Forever to remain—

MRS. JANE M. FAIRBANKS

To hallowed learning consecrate ;
 And where the elm had grown,
 This day, in anti-typal state,
 It stands transformed in stone.

The godly pair had ne'er forgot
 Their tree of triple stem ;
 Which veiled, that they discerned it not,
 A parable for them.

That secret sense at last grew clear,
 The parable was known ;
 Three sacred schools in one appear,
 Shrined in those walls of stone.

If the old elm-tree bourgeoned still,
 And on its bole, graved deep,
 The names which this fair legend fill,
 Their memory dear to keep :

Not half so sacred, half so grand,
 That monument, I rede,
 As are yon rude old walls that stand,
 Vocal with saintly deed.

Yet ere my song in silence dies,
 Sound, harp of mind, one strain,
 That through its lapsing harmonies,
 We'll think with joy of PAYNE.²

Fifty round years shrink to a little span,
 Measured alone, when Time's vast course we scan ;
 But fairly judged by what they bring about,
 The span may stretch so far that if left out
 Of History's scope, the blank might wider seem,
 Than five dull centuries' space along the stream.
 To such acclaim as this, their record swells
 The five decades our Alma Mater tells.

The self-same year that saw her race begun,
 Brought store of fame to Copenhagen's son; ³
 Who, with keen thought and quick discerning glance,
 Saw VOLTA's pile the needle's pole entrance;
 And married then, with bonds of mystic wire,
 The magnet's force and weird electric fire:
 Than which no married myth of old Greek days
 Bore progeny that grew to such amaze.
 By Jupiter (your pardon, but I do not seek
 In phrase profane with emphasis to speak),
 By Jupiter this fame was not outdone,
 When Maia gave him Mercury his son,
 A famous god, skilled both of hand and heel,
 With this to speed his flight, with that to steal.
 But Jove's fleet errand boy (the arrant rogue!)
 Lived when the telegraph was not in vogue;
 And living now, he'd trade cap, wings, and cloak,
 For fifty shares of Western Union stock,
 Or cheat the Company, if he were able,
 Out of a right in the Atlantic cable,
 And spare his heels by flashing o'er the wires
 Olympian messages and, chief, his Sire's.
 To OERSTED's ken, just fifty years ago,
 WHEATSTONE and MORSE their splendid honors owe;
 Not they had linked our speech to Heaven's fleet fire,
 Had he not forged that mystic ring of wire.
 Thy grandest works, O potent Steam, belong
 To this great orb just rounded in my song;
 Its earliest days, scarce conscious of the might,
 Like wizard spell, locked in thy pinions light.
 The venturous youths who came, a single pair, ⁴
 The first to seek our nursing mother's care,—
 Nor thought a little lore a dangerous thing,—
 Of railroad routes had no imagining.
 I little doubt they hither came afoot,
 Such locomotion best their means would suit:
 Poor students they—I mean in worldly pelf,

And no reproach, I came of such myself,
 And later twenty years, when railroads still Kept far away from this secluded hill!
 Ah! while I sing of marvels accomplis,
 Within the scope of our glad jubilee,
 Why is it not, O Steam, my happy lot,
 To sing a railway at this favored spot?
 An end so long desired, so long undone,
 Had filled my theme with wonders, all in one.
 Then, blest relief! despite Alumni's call,
 I had not come upon the stage at all!
 But now, alas! no railway in our vale,
 My verse must not of other marvels fail,
 Achieved by Steam since, on this happy height,
 Fair Learning plumed her wings for sacred flight.
 Athwart the land a thousand meshes spread,
 Steam's iron nets to catch the gains of trade,
 And, comet-like, the flying cars are hurled,
 With fiery trains, half round the reeling world;
 While, scarcely chilled to-day, the fervors glow,
 Struck to white heat by that electric blow,
 Which smote the golden spike and zoned the land,
 From dawn to sunset with an iron band.

Great on the land, O Steam, thy marvels grow,
 And never more shall Time be reckoned slow,
 Since thy fleet wheels like circling planets spin,
 And everything is done amid their din;
 While o'er the seas thy potent spell is flung,
 And, prongs reversed, old Neptune's trident hung,
 All rusted now, upon his cavern walls,
 As deep to deep at thy enchantment calls.
 Across his emerald floors thy footsteps glide,
 And all his nymphs their charms in terror hide.
 Beneath his rage and heedless of his ire,
 Thy fingers weave the tracks of hidden fire,
 That glow with speech, two continents atween,
 And round the globe flash "Peace, good-will to men."

And wonders still come trooping to my verse,
 As fifty years with Memory I rehearse,
 Whose thither bounds lie back of arts to-day,
 Familiar grown as toys in childhood's play.
 In olden time, with rare and patient skill,
 The painter wrought the portrait at his will ;
 Go now, and look defiance at the Sun,
 And, winking once or twice, your picture's done !
 With magic box and subtle, chemic plate,
 No more the slow caprice of Time you wait :
 A dozen cards your honest likeness bear,
 And she may bless the Sun, whose face is fair !
 For neither gold nor rank his pencil trips
 At the plain truth, in homely eyes and lips.
 And not "the human face divine" alone,
 But face and form that Phidias wrought in stone,
 The Sun, turned artist, draws with magic grace,
 And doubly paints for us the moon's fair face,
 While on our walls, and in our albums glow
 Bright photographs of all things fair below.

Nor these alone ; great deeds of science wrought,
 And trophied arts with social marvels fraught,
 Our jubilee among the ages crown,
 Peerless in rank and matchless in renown !
 Dearer to us, Alumni of this hill,
 One triumph more, my verse must help to fill.
 Reverent, I sing, with glad and grateful lays,
 Yet awed the while, Jehovah's lofty praise,
 For what His hand omnipotent has done
 In the dark lands beneath the Orient sun.
 For victories there vouchsafed to godly men,
 Armed here for fight in days beyond our ken ;
 The earliest fruits of toils and tears and prayers,
 The oldest crowns our Alma Mater wears ;
 WADE and KINCAID, "nobile fratrum par," Yet only first of a long line they are.

It is not here, though fair the landscape lies,
 And tall and strong these classic buildings rise,
 I tis not here the chiefest work is done,
 That gives us joy to-day for Hamilton.
 Where first her sons as Christ's true heralds went,
 On Burmah's plains stands her best monument.
 Just tithe of those whom she in knowledge nurst,
 Their steps pursued whom she to God gave first,
 And for her fifty years, her annals shine
 With fifty names in that illustrious line.
 Blessed half century of years and men,
 And fit to blazon with a seraph's pen!
 For mine too high but that my verse were naught
 With not one gleam of all their glory caught.
 Hark, how amid the jubilant strains I pout,
 There claims brief space this sacred measure more:

Jubilee!

To Heaven's high throne send up the song,
 In holy praise the hour prolong;
 Sweet tribute from this mighty throng,
 To Christ the Saviour be,
 Who gives us Jubilee;
 And to the lands beyond the sea;
 Jubilee!

Jubilee!

Lifted both heart and voice again,
 For holy gifts to humble men;
 For fire of tongue and skill of pen,
 To Heaven in harmony
 With our glad jubilee,
 The voice of Burmah's ransomed be:
 Jubilee!

'Twas in the good old days I came, a boy,
 To these green heights, with warm ingenuous joy;
 Eager to learn, and doubting not the skies,

The very air I breathed, would make me wise ;
 And when I heard yon streamlet's music first,
 Odes sweeter far than Castaly's it versed.
 To this dear hill I thought Olympus low,
 And had the choice been given me to go
 To this or that, a little Greek to get,
 My heart was here, and has not wandered yet.
 For Jove's great name but little awe I knew,
 But to myself and truth, let me be true ;
 When him I saw who ruled this hill-top then,
 I deemed him more than Jupiter of men ;
 His lofty mien, his locks like wing of night,
 His piercing eyes, " dark with excess of light ;"
 His beetling brow which o'er their splendors hung,
 On my young^s soul a spell of wonder flung,
 Which later grew to love with reverence blent,
 Through all his life and o'er his grave unspent.
 Dead on our rolls, and on the stone his name ;
 Yet KENDRICK lives in Alma Mater's fame.

Unlike our chief, yet mating him in good,
 In my young eyes the sainted HASCALL stood
 Dauntless in zeal and patient in his trust,
 In temper Christ-like, in his actions just ;
 No blazonry his simple deeds display ;
 He trod a steep and self-renouncing way :
 Greater in love than lore, yet skilled to teach
 The precious truths Christ's ministers should preach ;
 Worthy to bear that Belteshazzar's name
 Whose loyalty to God made lions tame ;
 His prayers and faith and charities and tears
 With sheaves are crowned, the fruit of fifty years.

Before me throng, while thus the vail I draw,
 The living men whom first with fear I saw ;
 Yet living now, though older, greater grown,
 I see again, with all my terror flown.

CONANT no more, like Hebrew Saul for height,
 Seems head and shoulders up above my sight,
 And although strange enough my word appears,
 I do not tremble now before our SEARS!
 To EATON once I bent with timid bow,
 And by the arm I dare to take him now,
 And tell him soon how well his speech was done,
 Though to long metre, like my verse, 'twas run;
 While with our Grecian master, KENDRICK hight,
 I cracked my jokes at tea, the other night,
 As if his voice had not been erst to me
 More fearsome than ἡ πολύφλοισβος—sea.
 And the keen SPEAR, whose thrust I sought to shun,
 Pricks me no more, though ill my task be done.
 Good masters all, I pray your pardon be,
 That time has made you look less tall to me;
 Not less indeed, but only less to fear,—
 Your wit and worth in older eyes appear.

A very boy I sought this prophets' school,
 Exception rare, nay, single, to the rule,
 That they who came to study in its halls,
 Must have, beside their own, their church's calls.
 Except my youth, I know no reason why
 They let your poet slip unlicensed by,
 Unless the rhymes I wrote in Raymond's class,
 With large poetic license, helped me pass.
 However this may be, ere long I know,
 The College doors began more broad to grow;
 The license-law—a figure, soon, of speech—
 Was honored less by keeping than by breach;
 And embryo lawyers, doctors, merchant-men,
 With preachers, mixed in incubation then;
 While here and there, pardon my plainness, please,
 Our Alma Mater nursed a few M. C.'s,
 Though had she known the work she was about,
 I must believe she had not turned them out!

Ah, fatal hour that let the rabble in,
 And sprinkled sanctity, alas ! with sin.
 Then college tricks, unknown here in the past,
 From single germs grew up and bourgeoned fast ;
 Till in their shade grave theologues reclined,
 And found their umbrage rather to their mind :
 And thus it fell this College chrysalis—
 An institution sui generis—
 Lapsed from its larva folds, essayed to fly,
 And soared a full blown b— University !

But all this sin was after I was done,
 And I went out a poor, unlettered son ;
 Though to our mother's credit be it said,
 When she her larva skin had fairly shed,
 And from her wings could drop her own degrees,
 And let them fall wherever she should please,
 She pitied me and taught me how to say
 My A. B.—ab ; or sometimes B. A.—ba.
 And finding me a scholar apt to learn,
 In two more years gave me another turn ;
 And higher still the alphabetic stem
 I climbed, until my range became A. M.
 Though, let me own, with undisguised chagrin,
 I missed some letters that occur between ;
 I don't know why—I never asked indeed.—
 She did not teach me any more to read :
 But I suppose it was for want of time,
 At least this reason helps me to a rhyme ;
 Or since the D's and L's in doublets go ;
 She may have run so short of them, you know,
 That only those who couldn't do without,
 She thought worth while to have a care about ;
 Good mother, evermore be this your rule ;
 Doctor the sick and make the empty full.

But yesterday, I flattered me I'd made
 A happy hit in what I've just now said ;

And little dreamed of aught my sport to spoil,
 And make my shot upon myself recoil.
 It chanced on this wise—to be very brief:
 Among her sick and needing quick relief,
 Our mother counted me and sent her leech,
 To Doctor me with curious art and speech.
 My symptoms puzzled him and on his face
 A fine perplexity, inspired my case.
 When looking grave and shaking his wise head,
 "I think you must be—Ph. D." he said.
 Trembling in every limb, I stammered, "W-what?"
 But he was gone and answer there was not.
 This formula of cabalistic guise,
 Perplexed in turn my wide distended eyes:
 What could it mean but physicked written short?
Arsenicum et Nux, perchance, I thought—
 (And took the dose as GIFFORD said I ought);
 And now again—I'm quite myself, you see,
 And thank our Mother for her Ph. D.

Some six sick brothers in the same sad need,
 With simpler symptoms, only got D-D'd.
 I hope they're well to-day and bless the leech
 Who Doctored them, though with such common speech.
 I know some patients make a great ado,
 And quite refuse to take the med'cine too;
 But the prescription, somehow, they hold fast,
 And swallow it behind the door at last.
 For my own part, I don't refuse the pill,
 But I protest I do not take it ill!
 And for the good our mother did to me—
 I ask her frankly, "Mother! what's your fee?
 Here are these rhymes, my only current notes,
 I know such scrip but light adventure floats;
 Yet these I bring, to pay for my degree—
 Where rests the bargain, pray—with you or me?"

This tedious pace, at which my verses go,
 "Heroic" may be, but I call it slow ;
 Suppose in quicker and alternate rhymes,
 I dwell a moment on the good old times.

The good old times at Hamilton,
 When I was here a boy ;
 I never pause to think upon,
 Without a thrill of joy.

That things were somewhat primitive,
 I must indeed allow :
 Those good old times, you may believe,
 Were different from now.

The village was a rural place,
 And rural fashions ruled ;
 Its maidens they were fair of face,
 And very sweetly schooled.

And we who dwelt upon the hill
 Were deemed such safe young men,
 The girls would visit us at will ;
 'Twas quite the fashion then.

We were so good their dear mammas
 Invited us to tea ;
 Our credit with their wise papas
 Was good as good could be.

We got up chapel lectures then,
 With missionary ends :
 And found it sweet to go at ten,
 Home with our village friends.

'Twas very nice, in those old days,
 Our Chemistry to get
 In Mather's good old-fashioned ways :
 I'd like to do it yet.

Down in the brick Academy,
With all its pretty girls,
And naught of Quaker rule, you see,
Beards this side—that side curls!

But beards and curls most fitly mixed,
We learned Affinity;
And in our hearts its laws were fixed,
As firm as firm could be.

If Carbon were the theme, we'd find
Diamonds in sparkling eyes,
Brighter and purer to our mind
Than Golconda supplies.

The air was five parts Oxygen,
Whate'er the books might say;
Ah! Chemistry, we learned it then,
In quite a charming way.

We lived in "Commons" on the hill;
Naught could more common be;
I would the "cottage" stood there still,
Type of frugality!

Three tables there, of various grade,
Three times a day were set;
One goodly meat and drink displayed,
And one was plainer yet.

The third (I never tried its fare);
'Twas porridge day by day;
Though many went, none lingered there,
But gulped—and rushed away.

For eighty cents a week they fed,
That porridge on per se;
For ninety, there was meat and bread;
And for a dollar—tea!

No luxury beyond this last,
 No higher cost we knew ;
 If chargeable with living fast,
 'Twas hurrying to get through.

Great fault with colleges is found,
 That nothing fresh they teach ;
 Only dead languages abound,
 And ancient modes of speech.

The clamor rings for modern arts,
 And practical ideas ;
 Till Homer's ghost, and Livy's starts,
 And Euclid's stops his ears.

Now let me sing in these rude rhymes,
 To Alma Mater's praise,
 How bravely, in the good old times,
 She led in these new ways.

She had a manual-labor shop,
 With implements at will ;
 Where those who chose to hew and chop,
 Could have of Art their fill.

While some of frugal living plained,
 Some others planned to live ;
 Those nothing saw but leanness gained,
 These by the saw did thrive.

Those halls of Industry no more
 Their scanty wage afford ;
 Boards helped her sons to pay before,
 And now they pay for board.

Then Architecture too she taught—
 Not theories alone :
 Our hands her solid precepts brought,
 And built them up in stone.

Our skill was shown in yon gray walls—
 Scarce grayer now than we ;
 And in these woods fair dwelling halls
 Mark our free-masonry.

All honor then to Hamilton,
 Whose technics led the van ;
 And may she reap a wide renown
 In works she well began.

Too long my lays of those old times,
 Those dear old times to me ;
 Of which I weave a thousand rhymes,
 And sing to Memory.

One theme too few this festal song would zone
 If with its warblings free should blend no tone
 Of Jubilee, no gratulation sweet,
 That on this hill, this happy day we meet :
 That these green slopes, hallowed by prayer and vow,
 To sacred use, have lapsed not to the plough ;
 That we, the sons of Alma Mater named,
 Are not in orphanage, bereaved and shamed.
 Such fatal harm, in Fate's dread balance hung,
 A sickly gloom o'er our fair history flung ;
 And thousands sat oppressed within the shade,
 Wept for the woe, and God's deliverance prayed.
 Their tears and prayers availed, God's succor came,
 The peril passed, all glory to His name !
 Oh ! had these lands divorced from Learning been,
 And these fair halls despoiled of Wisdom's sheen,
 Though from the wrack another school had sprung,
 What should have hushed the taunts of Time's true tongue ?
 What fame of Rochester, though broadly toned,
 Had the deep wrongs of Hamilton condoned ?
 Better to us, Alumni of this hill,
 That plenteous fruits our mother's lap should fill,
 Than honors heap to flout the stars above,
 On other schools we were not born to love !

Fain would I sound a strain of later years,
 And sing how Alma Mater now appears,
 As with the pilgrims of the past I trace
 The old and new in her beloved face,
 Loving the old, but giving yet the new,
 Just meed of praise and approbation due.
 But should I pay my measures out at will,
 The shades of night would find me singing still,
 Though much I doubt but I should sing alone,
 Daylight and you together spent and gone.
 So lest my lay mock the new Cable's length,
 And lack alone its thrilling life and strength,
 I'll cut it soon, and at the welcome halt,
 Yours be the task (not mine) to find the "fault;"
 Yet let it run, a few more knots of time,
 Since still they come, the signals flashed in rhyme;
 While from my heart, through all your glistening eyes,
 The swift electric pulse of feeling flies.
 One message more, or be it two or three,
 You'll not refuse, so that you get them "free."

O happy youths! (thus runs dispatch the first),
 Who by our Alma Mater now are nursed,
 Her fifty years of age and lore and skill,
 Which shed their glory on this ancient hill,
 Demand of you by scholarship to show
 How more she's wise to teach and you to know;
 Not less indeed than Crichtons you should be
 Who take her high degrees Post-Jubilee;
 Below her attic honors none should lodge,
 Her chief's wise laws none ever seek to DODGE.
 And though whom EATON leads may well be quick
 Nor they be slow who feel the SPEAR's sharp prick,
 Let none in folly or in vice be "fast,"
 Or noble gifts in ways ignoble waste;
 With BEEBEE roam Ecclesiae terras o'er,
 Like other bees, still gathering precious store;

With OSBORN learn of science more than we,
 In MATHER'S simple days, of Chemistry:
 At sweet Siloa's brook with HARVEY scan
 God's holy Oracles revealed to man!
 By LEWIS led, from English letters learn
 The knack of "thoughts that breathe and words that burn;"
 With ANDREWS wage Homeric battles o'er,
 Or from the "Clouds" draw down Hellenic lore;
 Of birds and bugs in every clime that fly,
 With BICKMORE trace their genealogy;
 While JUDSON woos you to Etrurian fields,
 Whose classic soil rich sheaves of learning yields;
 Till Latin, Greek, and Hebrew well rubbed in,
 With Physics mixed and Logic, clear and thin,
 Like Greek athletes in old Olympian strife,
 You start to win the crowns of noble life.
 But hush! in vain the keys my fingers urge,
 The signs drop slow and sink into

A DIRGE.

Aye, muffle the joy-bells and sadden their tone,
 Our hearts and our memories belong not alone
 To themes of delight, till these moments are flown.

Ring a knell for our heroes who fell in the fight,
 That thickened to woe in Rebellion's dark night,
 And palled with its fears Freedom's banner of light.

For their courage of heart and their prowess of hand,
 For their high faith in God and their love of their land,
 For their life-blood poured forth like the ebb on the strand.

Ring a knell for our loss of such brothers as they,
 Whose places of honor are vacant to-day;
 And only their dear names we wreathe with the bay.

Stelligeri sunt, on the roll of the head,
Stelligeri sunt, in the heavens o'erhead,
 Where their souls on the pinions of victory fled.

A knell for our loss, but a pæan of pride,
 That so noble they lived, so heroic they died ;
 And shrined in our love their sweet virtues abide.

Words for the hour are crowding on the line !
 Brothers, this place is only not divine,
 Not Heaven's gate, but far along the road—
 A Beulah whence we glimpse the best abode,
 The higher school, where Wisdom's pillars rise
 And prop the dome of broad, unfathomed skies ;
 Of whose pure light the shadows here alone,
 Science, Philosophy, and Art are known :
 To whose degrees of honor who would reach,
 Must catch the Shibboleth of Heaven's sweet speech,
 Drink at the fount of Love divinely free ;
 And of the school of Christ a graduate be.

We have come up from earth's turmoil and dust (Too brief our stay to let our weapons rust),
 And duty's strife ere yet again we wage,
 Hand clasped in hand, be this our mutual gage,
 That for the Right alone the sword we wield ;
 That to the Wrong our flag we never yield ;
 That by the cross on which our Master died,
 We victory win o'er Passion, Sin and Pride ;
 That at the grave we conquer when we fall,
 And all our life-work gain in losing all :
 True to the last, to God and self and her,
 Our mother, teacher, friend, and Truth's interpreter.

Faint grow the throbs of the electric bond,
 That holds us here in love and friendship fond.
 One tender message more, and soft and low,
 From heart to heart the failing signals go :

We are glad and sad together :
 Glad for this dear meeting,
 Sad that time's so fleeting ;

But we scarce know whether
Most to joy, or most to sorrow,
When we think upon the morrow.

We shall be sad to-morrow,
When the Jubilee is finished ;
But grief will be diminished,
And solace come to sorrow,
In the thought of all the glory
Of our Alma Mater's story.

Our farewells must be spoken,
Spoken low to-morrow,
But, above all sorrow,
There will swell unbroken
Vows, that time and distance never Shall our faithful hearts dissever.

When we to Graduation
From Life's stern school are bidden,
Our weaknesses all hidden
In Gods divine salvation ;
May we take degrees in glory,
Nor vain nor transitory.

And when of God's great college
High festival is holden,
Before its altars golden,
We'll stand complete in knowledge ;
While Heaven's jubilee chorus—
Breaks with its raptures o'er us.

ADDRESS OF REV. ROBERT POWELL.

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS :

I stand before you, almost a solitary remnant of a by-gone age. The frosts of seventy-nine winters have made the almond-tree to flourish and those that look out of the windows to be darkened and fears are in the way, because man goes to his long home. I look around for my fathers and compeers, and look in vain. Where are my old pastors, Hosmer and Hascall, my early friend and helper, Kendrick, whose certificate of my ordination I still hold, and whose encouraging words on the day of my public consecration can never be forgotten? Where are the fathers, Payne and Olmsted, and others whose counsels and prayers I once so much enjoyed? They sleep their last sleep. I have visited their monuments, but they are not there. How enchanting is the power of memory! It calls up their once familiar forms, they flit before me as a shadow, and are gone, and nothing of interest remains, but a melancholy reflection on scenes that can never be reënacted.

Fourteen years of the early part of my life were spent in this vicinity. Here I entered the ministry, under peculiar embarrassments, with a shattered constitution and with limited scientific advantages, so necessary in my sacred calling. Thirty-six years I have been the resident of a western State, and have had some small experience in the struggles of pioneer life, and God has made me understand somewhat the profits of his chastening rod, that I might not be left to glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. It can be no matter of wonder to you, brethren, that I should be the friend of education, having suffered so much and so long for the want of it. More than fifty years this want has been felt. I have now come more than five hundred miles and for the last time to join with you in thanksgiving to God for his favors to this people in their struggles and efforts in sustaining and promoting the cause of education on this mount of the prophets. The ordeal through which this Institution has passed in by-gone years is a sure token of divine favor. It has passed the Rubicon, and all is well. Coming events cast their shadows before. The tempest that once threatened desolation and made these hills to tremble and the forest to bend, found some whose faith failed not, but with eagle eye and eagle wing they rose directly toward the sun.

“As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form
Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm,
While round its base the whirling storm is sped
Eternal sunshine settles on its head!”

These storms are sometimes necessary to purify the atmosphere and stir the turbid water beneath. A calm is sure to follow. “Faith bides the shock blind nature cannot shun, and lands thought smoothly on the farther shore.”

Here lies our only safety, trust in God, fidelity in the discharge of duty, and all will end in success and a large reward.

I have surveyed your heights, and the quarry God has bequeathed to you. I see it is not exhausted. Abundant material for future enlargement still remains. I have taken a bird's eye view of your beautiful vale and village which lies nestled amid these fruitful surrounding hills, and which I have admired for more than 60 years. I feel somewhat the spirit of inspiration and prophecy. My age seems renewed, like the eagle's; the pulsation and vitality of earlier days are for the time being felt and enjoyed. Thanks be to God for this farewell view of these consecrated walls and cherished friends, whom I trust to view ere long from a higher sphere with immortal eyes and with untold interest.

Being the last, the least, and the youngest of the thirteen that started this enterprise, you will indulge me in a brief allusion to its origin. From the time Dea. Payne knelt at the foot of his first fallen tree some 70 years since, and consecrated his all to God near these gushing springs, a marked providence is visible in tracing events to the present time. Some 52 years ago a few brethren, 13 in number, assembled at the house of Dea. Jonathan Olmstead, of precious memory, a little down this vale, seated in a middle room, mostly on the east side, myself and one or two others on the opposite side, Father Bostwick in the chair. The image of that meeting is still deeply impressed on my mind. It was an hour of thought. Not a smile played upon a single countenance. Every mind seemed to reel under the weight of the responsibility we were about to assume. Every knee bowed; our weakness and needs were poured out by solemn prayer into the bosom of Him who gives power to the faint, and to them that have no might. We then plighted our faith and gave our pledge, small though it was. We had put our hand to the plough, and we could not, we dare not look back. Here then was planted the small seed, the least of all, that has produced this great tree under whose branches so many birds of paradise have plumed their wings to bear with angel speed the good tidings of salvation to our sin-cursed race.

I leave to others to note the instrumentality and progress of subsequent events. We have reached a period of brilliant sunshine and cheering hope; the winter is past, the time of the singing of birds is come. A voice comes in thrilling tones: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee; the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee!"

Let me close by a remark to the rising ministry. Your uneducated fathers and brethren congratulate you in view of your cheering prospects and advantages; advantages for which they sighed, and sighed in vain. Your present privileges are the fruits of wearisome toil, prayers and tears. But this ordeal was the appointment of heaven. God chose not the learned and the mighty. He chose men of muscular and mental nerve, inured to toil and hardship. They were men for the times, men of faith and power, and mighty in the Scriptures, well adapted to lead the van in the march of emigration, to prepare the way of the Lord, to grade the highway, and bridge the streams and marshes and dangerous gulfs and glens for the ransomed of the Lord to pass over. Hosts of such men in their native and unpolished dress will still be needed, and God will employ them for an indefinite period in the sublime future as long as the star of empire leads to the great west. Fifty years since our educated ministers in all Middle and Western New York were numbered with half my fingers, yet our then numerous churches grew and prospered, because prayers and efforts were combined. These must be continued or we are fated to decline. We must not lean upon our learning or wisdom. It is a broken reed. Christ alone is our wisdom and strength. Let me exhort, then, the rising ministry in view of what God hath wrought, to imitate the zeal and activity of those who have gone before. Let all, then, of the various grades of mental and literary culture strike hands and lead on God's marshalled hosts, till they reach the goal of eternity, and all will be well.

Brethren, our calling is a life warfare. The enemy is not dead nor asleep, or on a journey. Sturdy men, armed for the contest, are wanted, and we must have them, to meet his marshalled hosts and drive him from his stronghold. "No rest, no rest, this side of Jordan," is our watchword. The rest, the reward, the crown, lies beyond. We must die to live, if we would live to die no more. I am now to bid adieu to all that has cheered me on this visit, my task is done. I have given vent to a few of my pent-up feelings.

And now, brethren and friends of this great assembly, I bid you farewell! Farewell to loved Hamilton and these consecrated walls, to the tombs of my fathers and brethren, to this pleasant grove and these gushing springs, to all the enchanting scenery which has stirred my spirit within me! The end of earth is at hand. I shall see you no more. I now return to my friends and family in my adopted State to finish my closing day, to lay aside my armor and await the call of my Father, "Child, come home!"*

* This venerable minister, whose presence at the Jubilee gave so much satisfaction, after his removal from the neighborhood of Hamilton, labored at Newburg and Cornwall on the Hudson. He was then about ten years pastor in Milton and Palmyra. In 1836 he began his pioneer work in the west—settled nine or ten years as pastor, but chiefly engaged as exploring missionary of the B. H. M. Society, ranging from the lakes to the Missouri, and from the north to the south of Michigan, Illinois and Iowa. His last reported residence is Clinton, Mich.

REV. JONATHAN WADE, D.D.

Foreign Mission Work

MADISON UNIVERSITY.

BY H. HARVEY, D. D., PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL INTERPRETATION, IN HAMILTON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

This sacred Institution was born and nurtured in the spirit of missions. "The Hamilton Baptist Missionary Society," which preceded the N. Y. Baptist State Convention, was formed in 1807, when this region, now so rich in population and culture, was still almost a wilderness. Among its earliest officers were Ashbel Hosmer, Jonathan Olmstead, Elisha and Samuel Payne, and others of the revered founders of this community. For many years, devoted men of God, under its direction, published the gospel through the new settlements in Central and Western New York. This spot was thus early consecrated as a radiating centre of Christian light, and many a church, now among the most vigorous and honored in the land, sprang from influences here originated.

These men of God early felt a profound interest for the heathen world. For some years before our foreign missions begun, it is said, the church here wrestled with God, in fervent faith and prayer, pleading that salvation might come to the nations sitting in darkness. When, therefore, in 1812, Judson and Rice were baptized in India, and the voice of God so signally summoned the Baptists of America to the foreign mission work, they received the call as the answer of prayer, and at once responded with holy enthusiasm.

It was in that spirit the Institution was founded. The fundamental idea was the training of men for work among the destitute; a God-called ministry, like the Apostles, who should preach Christ where he was not already known. This was the underlying distinctive thought, and hundreds of godly men here trained have gone forth with intrepid zeal, as pioneer ministers to the East and the West, the North and the South.

During the half-century life of the Institution, our own country has itself been one vast Missionary field. The immense foreign immigration, the mighty movement of population westward, and the wonderful growth of new centres of life and activity across the continent, have created a demand for earnest, educated men in the home work. Hamilton has responded nobly to this call. The spirit of self-sacrifice has ever been fostered within these walls, and the men here trained have sought, not positions of learned ease or pastoral distinction, but of hard work, where they endured hardness in the pioneer service of the gospel. A multitude of its students have entered States west of us. They have there published the gospel, have reared institutions of learning, and have gathered churches, many of which are now among the strongest in the land. Among the noblest minds in chairs of instruction and in the pulpit, now giving direction to the mental and religious character of the West, the sons of our revered Alma Mater are everywhere distinguished.

In sketching the Foreign Mission Work of Hamilton, it will be convenient to divide the half-century into decades.

FIRST DECADE—1819-29.

The first class, which graduated in 1822, sent forth two of its noblest men to Burmah, Jonathan Wade and Eugenio Kincaid. The earliest fruits of the Institution were thus consecrated to Missions.

JONATHAN WADE, D. D., now the venerable senior missionary in Burmah, was born in Otsego, N. Y., Dec. 10, 1798. He entered at Hamilton before its full organization, Feb. 14, 1818, and graduated in 1822. After a year spent in the study of the Burman language, he was set apart as a Missionary at Utica, June 11, 1823, where Nathaniel Kendrick, Daniel Hascall, Alfred Bennett, John Peck, and Elon Galusha officiated, all of whom have long since gone to their reward. He sailed the same year, June 22, 1823, with his late devoted wife, Deborah B. Lapham, for Burmah, commended to their work in a remarkable prayer on the wharf at Boston, by the venerated Dr. Baldwin.

Dr. Wade has spent almost half a century among the heathen, interrupted only by two brief visits to this country for health, in both of which he gave a powerful impulse to the Missionary work in the churches. His labors have been incessant and arduous. As a preacher, he is marked by clearness, power, and spirituality. As a counsellor and guide of the native churches, his sound, discriminating judgment has been invaluable. In literary work, his labors have been abundant. He gave to the Karens a written language, he prepared a Karen dictionary, and aided in several of the Karen translations of the Scriptures, and has published numerous books and tracts in the Burman and Karen languages. Now in old age, having recently buried the noble wife who so long toiled by his side, he still labors at his post revered through Burmah and in the churches of our own land; but is in great feebleness of body, waiting for the call of the Master to heavenly rest.

EUGENIO KINCAID, D. D., was born in Wethersfield, Ct., in 1797. He entered the Institution among its first students, in 1819, and graduated in the class of 1822. After preaching some time in Galway, N. Y., and as a Home Missionary in Pennsylvania, he sailed for Burmah, May 24, 1830.

The life of this intrepid Missionary has been one of intense activity. Ardent and fearless, he has encountered much hardship and peril. He reestablished the Mission in Ava in 1833, after the death of Dr. Price, and baptized the first converts there. Surrounded by constant peril, he exhibited a tact and judgment and courage in his delicate and difficult post such as won warmest admiration alike at the Court of Ava and among the friends of Missions. When civil war compelled at last the relinquishment of that Mission in 1840, he was sent to Arracan. Here his labors in preaching were abundant, but the illness of Mrs. Kincaid compelled their return to this country in 1842, where he was detained until 1850. His eloquent, thrilling addresses during this visit produced the most powerful effect upon the missionary spirit of the churches, and are still remembered by multitudes. Some of his descriptions of life and perils among the heathen are worthy to rank among the classics of our language. On his return to Burmah, he labored at Rangoon, Prome, and finally at the capital, where he acquired the confidence of the Royal Court to such a degree that he was sent in 1856 as bearer of despatches from the Burmese monarch to our government. Returning in 1857, he resumed his chosen work with accustomed ardor. He has recently returned, and is at present in this country, venerable in years, and revered as one among those "who have hazarded their lives for the name of the Lord Jesus."

BENJAMIN R. SKINNER, of the class of 1827, was earliest among the costly sacrifices laid on the altar of African evangelization. He was born at Killingworth, Conn., Jan. 7, 1803. He was ordained at New Ipswich, N. H., 1827. He married Eliza Reed, of Killingworth. He sailed for Monrovia, Oct. 12, 1830. Soon after reaching his destination, his wife and two children sickened and died. He was himself attacked with the coast fever, and died while on the voyage homeward, March 5, 1831. He was a man, like Samuel Pearce, of seraphic Christian spirit and consecrated zeal, but fell thus early a martyr to the cause of Africa.

EVAN TUCKER, class of '24, JESSE ELLIOT, of '26, and LEMUEL STANNARD, of '27, were sent as missionaries to the North American Indians—a work then involving great self-sacrifice, toil and danger.

SECOND DECADE—1830-39.

During this period the missionary life of the Institution was greatly promoted through organizations. The Society for Inquiry and the Western and Eastern Associations, which exerted so wide an influence in after years, were formed at this time. The Eastern Association, organized Oct. 2, 1831, embraced among its earliest members all the now revered men who went forth in this decade to the foreign field; and its meetings were often scenes of intense and hallowed interest, as company after company of these holy men consecrated their lives to the salvation of the heathen. Twenty-four went forth in this period.

ABNER P. WELLS, of the class of '31, was the first of these. He was a native of Watertown, N. Y. He was appointed July 11, 1831, but did not reach Burmah till July 16, 1833. He was stationed at Maulmain and Rangoon, rendering very effective service to the Mission. But the failure of Mr. Wells' health compelled his return home, March 24, 1838.

The class of '33 sent four of its noblest men to the foreign field, Comstock, Vinton, Howard, and Dean. It was the period of Mr. and Mrs. Wade's first visit to this country, and their earnest words and holy zeal stirred the hearts of thousands. Their influence was specially felt in Hamilton, where for nine months these brethren and their wives were under their instruction in the Burman language; and many received their first impression of personal duty to go to the heathen from intercourse with these devoted servants of Christ. The whole company, consisting of eleven new Missionaries, sailed from Boston with Mr. and Mrs. Wade, July 2, 1834—an occasion of hallowed interest never forgotten by those who witnessed it. Mrs. Sigourney contributed one of her beautiful hymns, written for the parting hour; and they went forth amidst the prayers and benedictions of the churches throughout the land.

GROVER S. COMSTOCK was born in Ulysses, N. Y., March 24, 1809. He graduated at Hamilton College, studied law, and entered, with brilliant prospects, on his chosen profession in the city of Rochester. During the great revival in that city in 1831, he was converted, and at once consecrated his talents to the Christian ministry. He entered the theological seminary here, and, after spending two years, was set apart to the work of Missions. The field assigned him was Arracan, where he founded the Mission, and labored for ten years with great success. Multitudes were gathered to Christ in his intensely earnest ministry. Many even now remember the thrilling appeal made to the American churches by this toil-worn servant of Christ, when he shouted to a returning Missionary, as the vessel which brought him was receding from the Arracan shores—"Six men for Arracan! Six men for Arracan!" He died of cholera, April 25, 1844. His last words, uttered to Mr. Stilson, were, "My trust is in the Lord. He who has been with me thus far will still be with me and take care of me. I have no fear to die; my faith is fixed on Jesus. I wish you to state distinctly to my friends at home that I have never in the least regretted having come to this country." And when no longer able to speak, he would point upward, seeming to say, "There is my home, and there I long to be."

JUSTUS H. VINTON was a native of Connecticut, born at Willington, in 1806. He entered Hamilton in 1826. His life in Burmah was spent among the Karens; in the rainy seasons, devoting himself to the work of instructing the native ministry; and in the dry, making extensive tours for preaching. He was pre-eminently a man of revival power, and great numbers were added to the Lord. At the close of 1846, there were eighteen stations under his care, extending north and south from Maulmain, 140 miles, embracing fifteen churches, with nearly 700 members. He made a brief visit to this country for Mrs. Vinton's health in 1848. On his return he was stationed at Rangoon. A school of unprecedented numbers gathered round him at Kemmendine, and from that centre he made extensive preaching tours, everywhere attended by remarkable outpourings of the Holy Spirit. In the course of twenty months, he baptized 441. Returning from one of these tours, he was peculiarly exposed to a scorching sun, which, in his exhaustion, resulted in a fever, from which he died, in peaceful assurance of his interest in Christ, March 31st, 1858, terminating a life of twenty-three years of consecrated toil for the heathen. "He was an able and successful missionary, a man of faith and prayer, possessed of unusual mental activity and indomitable perseverance, and was wholly consecrated to the work." Probably no single life in Burmah has shown larger results in the ingathering of souls to Christ.

HOSEA HOWARD was born in West Springfield, Mass., 1802. On reaching Burmah, his life was devoted to the superintendence of the boarding school in the rainy season, and preaching tours in the dry season. He was a worthy coadjutor of the noble men with whom he was associated, though his life was passed in a quieter sphere of labor, where his fidelity and usefulness met rather the eye of the Master than of the public. Ill-health at last compelled him to retire from the mission; and he returned to the United States, August 7th, 1850. He resided in New York, Pittsfield, Mass., Missouri, and Bloomington, Ill., where he died about 1869-70.

WILLIAM DEAN, D. D., was born at Morrisville, N. Y., June 21st, 1807. Ordained at his native place, Morrisville, June, 1834. He was designated to the Chinese Mission at Bangkok, Siam, and has through life labored with great effectiveness and power either in Siam or China. As an author in the Chinese language, he is known in connection with Christian books and Scripture translations. Failure of health compelled him to return to this country, in 1853. After full recovery, some years since he renewed his toil at his chosen post among the Chinese, where with apostolic earnestness and marked success he is now laboring. In a letter, dated Bangkok, March 25th, 1869, he writes: "In reply to your inquiries, I may state that my reminiscences of Hamilton Institution go back to the time when it was wrapped in swaddling-clothes and laid in a manger. In those days the venerated Nathaniel Kendrick preached at Morrisville, my native town, and at his settlement with that infant church, it is recorded that 'one fortnight from this, we take a collection for Foreign Missions.' To this missionary man, and President of Hamilton Institution, I look as to my spiritual father. When I was sixteen, he preached my mother's funeral sermon. That sermon and my mother's death were connected with my first Christian experience. Soon after that I went to Hamilton to study; first, at the Academy under Prof. Morse, at the same time enjoying a home in the family of Dr. Kendrick. His explanations of the Scriptures and personal counsels had much to do in planning my future course of life. He was my first adviser in regard to preaching the gospel. With the trembling hope that I might do some good to the heathen—my first and last object of preaching—I entered the Institution, where I enjoyed the instructions of Kendrick, Hascall, Whitman, Sears, Bacon and Eaton, to each of whom I am largely indebted for influences and lessons which have aided me till now. During my course of study were organized the Eastern and Western Associations. Among the members of the latter were John L. Moore, Wm. Chaffee, Alvin Bailey, and Bartlett, who went to the missionary fields of Ohio and Illinois; while my roommate, Allen B. Freeman, was the first to plant a Baptist Church in Chicago. Among the original members of the Eastern Association were Howard, Vinton and Comstock, my fellow-passengers to India, in 1834. The meetings of this Association were for prayer and conference, and the discussion of questions connected with the missionary work. These meetings were of a Holy Ghost character, and aided to increase in the Association and Institution generally a spirit of prayer and consecration to Christ. The then prevailing characteristic of the Institution was the spirit of missions; and to that, perhaps more than anything else, may be attributed the prosperity of that school of the prophets. Hamilton men, whether they have gone abroad or settled at home, have generally been missionary men. Hence their success. It is now too late in the day for Hamilton to question the wisdom of sending her sons to the heathen. Those who have gone abroad have perhaps done more good at home than if they had remained in America; and then from the camp-fires of Hamilton Hill has been kindled a light in many of the dark places of the earth, which shall continue to shine till the grand illumination of the world. Some of the sons of Hamilton, that honored mother of missionaries, have fought a good fight, and gained a glorious victory, and await their exaltation from many a pagan land; and she is yet to raise up a numerous seed, in which the nations of the earth are to be blessed.

"I may not be with you in person at the coming anniversary, but I shall rejoice in all your good things, and in spirit greet many an old friend there; and, after fifty years more, I expect to meet you at a still more jubilant gathering, on a still more hallowed spot, with even more joyous memories. There we may introduce to each other the ransomed ones brought with us to the 'general assembly' from various tribes and peoples under heaven, to be presented to him who redeemed them to God by his precious blood, and to whom they and we may offer ourselves anew, and give our services forever."

In the year 1835, another large company went forth from Hamilton to the heathen world, Ingalls, Abbott, Reed, Haswell, Day and Phillips. They sailed, together with five other missionaries, and Rev. Howard Malcom, D. D., September 21st, 1835.

LOVELL INGALLS was born in Worcester, N. Y., August 21st, 1808. He spent three years at Hamilton, as a member of the Class of '37, but left in 1834, and became pastor at Cummington, Mass. He was designated to Arracan; but, through persecution, was obliged to labor first in Pegu and Me'gui, where he accomplished an immense work. Great numbers were converted and baptized; and in 1840 an association of six Karen churches was formed. The ill-health of Mrs. Ingalls at this time compelled him to retire to Maulmain. On her death, in 1845, he went to Akyab, Arracan, where his ministry was attended with a similar blessing. His own health amidst incessant labors at last failed, and compelled him to visit this country, in 1850. On his return, with the present Mrs. Ingalls, he resumed his post with marked success. More than seventy Burmans were baptized in eight months. His last post was Rangoon, to which he was assigned in 1854. Here he labored with his usual power, and many were led to Christ. Overwork at last destroyed his bodily power. "The duties of twenty men," he wrote, "devolve on me." He died March 14th, 1856, "diseased in all the important organs of the body;" a martyr to an unquenchable zeal for Christ and souls. Not long before his death, he wrote these words to a friend in America: "That interview, which would be so sweet to my soul, with you and many beloved ones in America, I anticipate round the Throne. There, my brethren, we shall commingle our joys in a union never to be severed. And may we not hope, that the presence of happy Burmans and Karens, saved by infinite grace, aided in the heavenward course by our prayers and preaching, will add to the happiness of our eternity? Were I transferred to my native land, with a knowledge of all I have experienced of trial, and all I have suffered from being severed from Christian society, and all I have seen of the pagans' vileness and hardness of heart, I would hasten with more willingness than at first to rescue them from death and hell. I make allusion to myself only to let you know that the course, upon which I have embarked so much, has lost none of its interest to me, nor has ever produced a sigh of regret."

ELISHA L. ABBOTT was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1809. He was a member of the class of '37, but was appointed a missionary at the close of the Sophomore year, Aug. 3, 1835, and designated to the Teloooons. After reaching Burmah, however, his destination was changed, and he was sent to the Karens. Here, for many years, his career was one of distinguished success, both as a preacher in the jungles, and as an educator and guide of the native ministry. He has been called the Apostle to the Karens. His missionary life extended through nineteen years, interrupted by one visit to this country for health. A broken constitution compelled him, finally, to retire from his field; he died peacefully at Fulton, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1854, loved and revered in our churches, but most of all; among the multitudes in Burmah whom he had led to Christ. Rev. Dr. Mason, his associate on the missionary field, makes the following record of his character and work:—"The death of Bro. Abbott is a great public loss; for he was remarkably successful in every branch of missionary labor. He preached the gospel, and great numbers were converted; he educated native preachers, and they are among the ablest that have entered the ministry; he established churches, and they are distinguished above all others for recognizing the obligations that rest upon them to support their own pastors; he wrote books, and they remain among our best specimens of Karen literature. His first station was Rangoon, and he travelled in the neighboring districts of Maubee, Pantanau, and Bassein, where he raised up several churches; but the persecutions to which the Karen Christians were subjected, induced him, for their sakes, to remove to Sandoway, where they could visit him without interference from government, and where he could educate for them an indigenous ministry. Nothing could have been more judicious than this arrangement. He was immediately joined by a select class of fifty promising students, and from his school in subsequent years went forth some of the most efficient pastors now in Burmah. The charge he gave them when they graduated, was: 'You are to lead the host of God in Burmah; you must not lean on missionaries, but on God;' and well have they observed it, not shrinking from martyrdom itself. After his return from America, he met with thirty-five native preachers from the districts west of Rangoon, all of whom he had baptized, all had been his pupils; and under their teachings churches had arisen embracing more than four thousand members, besides five thousand other hopeful converts, in connection with their congregations who had not been baptized. It would be difficult to find in the whole range of modern missions another man to whom God has awarded an equal measure of visible success. He rests; but the minds upon which his impinged still move on, destined to communicate their power to other minds from age to age in a multiplying progression. Then he is not dead. He lives in those to whom he has imparted life, and will there live in all coming generations of redeemed Karens."

ALANSON REED was a native of Chesterfield, Mass., born 1807. He was of the class of 1836. He was assigned to the Chinese department in Siam, and reached Bangkok July 1, 1836. His mind was of high promise, careful, judicious, earnest; and he rapidly became familiar with the Chinese language. But when just entering on the work he fell in death. He died calmly resting in Jesus, Aug. 29, 1833.

JAMES M. HASWELL, D.D., was born at Bennington, Vt., Feb. 4, 1810. He was a member of the class of '38, but sailed for Burmah in the company of 1835. He has now labored in the missionary field thirty-four years, as preacher, theological instructor, and translator. He translated the New Testament into the Peguan dialect; and has done much other service through the press, in the midst of arduous and widely extended labors in preaching and superintending the native ministry and churches. Much of this work is necessarily hidden from the eye of the public; but his earnest spirit, sound judgment, and persistent toil have been of incalculable value to Burmah. He has revisited America for health three times, on each visit greatly useful in promoting the missionary spirit. Few that heard can ever forget his judicious, noble address made in New York at the meeting of the Missionary Union in 1863; while his worn, trembling form attested a long life of self-sacrifice, love, and toil in Asia. He has just returned anew to the work, to spend his last years and lay his body amidst the scenes where his devoted life has been so blessed to the multitudes of the perishing.

SAMUEL S. DAY is a native of Upper Canada, born in Leeds Co., 1803. He belonged to the class of 1836 of this Institution, but sailed in 1835 for the Telooگو mission in India. He was founder of that important mission; and for nearly twenty years, his clear judgment, earnest zeal, and unremitting toil were devoted to its establishment and success. Few men have done harder work, or encountered more perils from climate and hostile heathen influences. Ill health and overwork compelled return to the United States in 1846. But he returned in 1848, leaving his family here, willing to labor on alone if need be, in his chosen work among the heathen. He finally returned in 1853, and with his devoted wife, now resides in Homer, N. Y., widely revered and loved as a faithful servant of the Lord Jesus. It cannot be doubted, that the success with which God is now crowning that mission, is connected with the years of self-sacrificing, judicious toil he expended there.

JEREMIAH PHILLIPS was a member of the class of 1838, but left in 1835, under appointment as a missionary of the General Baptists. He sailed for Orissa, India, with Amos Sutton and Eli Noyes. After a considerable period of successful missionary labor he returned, and with a large family settled in the West.

HORACE T. LOVE entered in 1829, and remained two or three years. He subsequently graduated at Brown University. He was appointed to Greece, and sailed October 24, 1836. After ten years of useful toil, ill-health compelled his return. He afterwards served as pastor at North Adams and South Abington, Mass.

RUFUS F. BUEL, a graduate of 1835, was born in Plymouth, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1812. He studied theology at Andover, and sailed for the mission in Greece, April 27, 1841. Without much apparent fruit, and once driven from his field by violent persecutions, he wrought cheerfully and patiently on through fourteen years, until the discontinuance of the mission in 1855, confident to the end of the early success of the Gospel among the Greeks. He was a man of sterling integrity and great steadiness of aim. He was also a scholar of varied learning, and during his missionary life translated various books into the Modern Greek, among which were Wayland's Moral Science, Pilgrim's Progress, and publications of the American Tract Society and Sunday-school Union. One of the converts under his ministry, Sakellarius, afterwards came to this country, studied theology at Newton, and is now in Athens, laboring with marked promise under the auspices of the American and Foreign Christian Union. Mr. Buel died some four years since in the City of Washington, where, with his accomplished wife, Mary Jane Raymond, sister of Rev. Lewis Raymond, he had conducted a Female Seminary of high reputation. His death was more than peaceful; it was triumphant.

SAMUEL S. ALDRICH, of the class of 1837, but leaving in 1835, was sent to the West Cherokees, Sept., 1834; but fell an early victim to exposure and toil. He died Nov. 22, 1835, at Fairfield, Indian Territory.

Another company, consisting of Messrs. Thomas and Bronson, of the class of '36, went forth Oct. 17, 1836, designated to the mission in Assam.

JACOB THOMAS was a native of Elbridge, N. Y. His life, while a member of the Institution, was marked for its deep and earnest piety. "The bower of prayer," in a neighboring grove, where he resorted for communion with God, was for many years a spot of hallowed interest, as a memorial of his godliness. After reaching Assam, on ascending the Brahmaputra, Mr. Bronson was taken seriously ill, and Mr. Thomas went in advance toward their destination, to secure medical help. Fearful floods prevailed and made navigation dangerous; and while he was already within sight of Sadiya, where Brethren Brown and Cutler were joyfully waiting their arrival, an immense tree suddenly fell across the boat and instantly killed him. He was permitted to see the land for which he had prayed, and in which he hoped to toil for Christ, but was not allowed to enter. Instead of the sacrifice and toil of earth, the Master summoned him to the joy and rest of Heaven. But his holy life and lofty missionary spirit were long felt as a blessed power in the Institution, and inspired others to gird themselves for the work he was denied.

MILES BRONSON, D.D., was born in Norway, N. Y., July 20, 1812. Thus suddenly bereft of his associate, he reached Sadiya, July 17, 1837. He founded the mission in Nowgong; and, in addition to extensive labors in preaching and translating, he established the Nowgong Orphan School, which for many years was a fountain of blessing. Besides the Assamese, he has labored among the Ka-Kyens, the Nagas and the Garos. He baptized the first Assamese, Miri, Mikir and Garo converts. He has prepared elementary books in the Singpho, Naga and Garo languages, all hitherto unwritten. And in the Assamese besides several smaller works and translations, he has published a dictionary, with English definitions, a work of much labor and value. His missionary life extends over a period of 33 years; during which his sound judgment, ripe scholarship and intrepid faith and zeal have made him a tower of strength in that mission, as a preacher, educator, translator, and guide of the native ministry and churches. He is at present with us, on a visit to this country for the health of Mrs. Bronson, but hoping soon to return, to devote his ripened powers to the work which has engrossed his life. Mrs. B. died Sept. 30, 1869—a saintly woman. Dr. Bronson, accompanied by one of his daughters, returned to Assam in Dec. 1869, and is prosecuting his labors with great energy and success.

LYMAN STILSON, of the class of '36, was born in Meredith, N. Y., 1805. He sailed from Boston, Oct. 28, 1837, in company with Messrs. Stevens and Brayton, designated to the mission in Burmah. He labored with great earnestness and power on the field for nearly fifteen years, doing effective service in all departments of missionary work; but was finally compelled by ill-health to retire from the mission. He reached this country in 1852. Resides in Nunda, N. Y. His wife, Lucretia Brownson, died in Maulmain, Aug. 4, 1851.

CORYDON H. SLAFTER, of the class of '38, was a native of Vermont, born at Norwich, Jan. 31, 1811. He sailed with Mr. Goddard, Dec. 6, 1838, designated to the mission in Siam. His missionary life, though brief, was intensely active. He fitted up a family boat, in which he and his wife made several tours; and he intended in this way to carry the gospel to every accessible part of Siam. Already he had penetrated further into the country than any previous missionary, but on one of these journeys he was stricken with disease, and died after reaching Bangkok, April 7, 1841. When informed that he must die, he at first evinced disappointment at so early an end of his work; but soon remarked, "God is able to carry on his work without me." Among his last words, he said, "I am going to dwell with the Lord Jesus in heaven."

About this period, several went from the Institution into missions among the North American Indians, then an essentially foreign field, and under the Foreign Board. These were CHARLES R. KELLAM, of the class of '36, to the Choctaws and Creeks; AMBLER EDSON, of the class of '38, to the Otoes; and J. O. MASON, D.D., of the class of '36, to the Creeks. All these, however, served only for a short season; but some of them have been widely known for ministerial usefulness on the home field. (See sketches.)

The class of 1838 contributed three of its number to the foreign field—Barker, Van Husen and Constantine.

CYRUS BARKER was born March 27, 1807, at Portsmouth, R. I. He sailed Oct. 22, 1839, designated to the Nagas, a hill tribe of Assam: but ultimately located at Gowahatti, in Western Assam. Here his work was greatly blessed in the conversion of souls and in the establishment of Christian schools, over which he watched with tenderest interest. But his labors were too arduous, and failing health compelled him to seek his native shores. He died and was buried at sea, June 31, 1850. Though not profound in intellect or brilliant in learning, he was distinguished for deep humility, quiet earnestness, and thorough devotion to his great work. Shortly before his death, he said: "I have tried to devote myself devoutly and faithfully to my Saviour; but I make no account of anything I have done, but all account of what my precious Saviour has done."

STEPHEN VAN HUSEN was born Dec. 5, 1812, in Catskill, N. Y., and united with the church in Homer, Aug. 1836. He sailed Oct. 22, 1839, designated to the Telogoos. He was associated with Mr. Day at Nellore for more than five years. But his health was from the first impaired. He labored ardently and effectively; but was compelled by the utter failure of his powers to return to this country, Oct. 1, 1845. He resided at Brattleboro, Vt., until his death, Dec. 13, 1854. Thus "God buries his workmen, but carries on his work." The field, where he toiled with so many discouragements, is now beginning to yield an abundant harvest.

ALFRED A. CONSTANTINE of the class of '38 and '40, was born in Ashburnham, Mass., May 5, 1812. He sailed Sept. 25, 1840, designated to Africa, in company with Joseph Fielding. Mr. Fielding and wife died soon after reaching Edina; and Mr. Constantine, being prostrated by disease, after ineffectual efforts to endure the climate, was compelled to return in 1842. Present residence, Jersey City, N. J.

THIRD DECADE, 1840-49.

During this period, the agitation on the subject of slavery was widely extended through the churches, dividing the missionary interest, and greatly impeding collections. This state of facts affected the missionary spirit of the Institution, discouraging young men from thoughts of engaging personally in the foreign work, by the general impression that they could not be sent out. Nevertheless, a number of the noblest sons of Hamilton belong to the missionaries of this decade.

ASA BENNETT, of Homer, N. Y., was a member of the class of '40. He was appointed Sept. 6, 1841, to the work in Burmah; but disease fastened on him, and he died before leaving this country. He was distinguished for his ardent piety and great usefulness during his life at the Institution.

EDWIN B. BULLARD was born in Shrewsbury, Vt., Sept. 12, 1813. He entered the class of '40, but left at the close of the Junior year, and was several years pastor at Foxboro', Mass. His missionary life was in Burmah, where he began his labors among the Sho Karens in 1844. He died of cholera April 5, 1847. He had, in his short term of service, shown such zeal and ability, that Mr. Vinton, writing of his death, said: "A more dreadful blow could hardly have fallen upon our mission." His son, a graduate of Newton, has just joined his mother in this field.

EDMUND B. CROSS, D.D., of the class of '39 and '41, was born at Georgetown, N. Y., June 11, 1814. He sailed from Boston, Oct. 30, 1844, designated to Burmah. He has been stationed at Tavoy and Toungoo, where his life has been marked by great activity and usefulness among the heathen, as a preacher, author, theological instructor, and guide of the native pastors and churches. His missionary life has extended over twenty-five years, broken by one visit to this country for Mrs. Cross' health in 1853, and the visit he is at present making here. [Since returned to Burmah.] Of his connection with this Institution, he says: "I can record that the seven years spent in Hamilton, without interruption and almost without the loss of a recitation, was the happiest part of my past life. I cannot expect that any part which still remains can find the precious, peaceful hours which belong to that period. Hamilton has been emphatically a "school of the prophets." It was not only a place of ardent piety and Christian enthusiasm, which as an atmosphere pervaded its immediate circle and filled its own walls, but it was for a long time the mother of all the missionaries to the West and East. It was the glory of the Institution that it began with the spirit of self-denial. It called for young men who did not cherish worldly aims. It pointed to the rugged path which the Saviour himself trod and into which he led his apostles. It renewed especially for the churches the great Commission; and made itself a rallying point, where the understanding of young men might be opened that they might understand the Scriptures, and where they should "tarry till they were endued with power from on high."

Rev. Dr. Dean, of China, with Ko A Bok, a Chinese convert, visited America in 1845; and his elevated missionary spirit proved an awakening power far and wide through our land, rousing the churches to a higher consecration to the work of evangelizing the world.

ERASMUS N. JENCKS, of the class of '45, accompanied Dr. Dean on his return, designated to the Chinese department of the mission in Siam. He sailed for the East, June 22, 1846. The climate, however, proved unfavorable to Mrs. Jencks, and he was compelled to return the following year. Mrs. J. died on the return voyage. See class of 1845.

Rev. Dr. Judson, after an absence of 33 years, visited the United States in 1845. The event produced a profound impression upon the churches, enlarging contributions, and enabling the Union to extend its operations. On his return to Burmah, he was accompanied by Brethren Harris and Beecher from Hamilton, designated to the Burmah mission. They sailed July 11, 1846.

NORMAN HARRIS, of the class of '42 and '44, was born at Beckett, Mass., Feb. 19, 1813. His missionary life has been spent among the Karens, as preacher, theological instructor, and superintendent of the native churches. His judgment, piety and zeal, have rendered his life one of great usefulness, and endeared him alike to his missionary associates and the wide circle of native Christians, among whom he has labored. Modest, unobtrusive, he has ever been a quiet, but effective worker; and hundreds once in heathenism recognize him as their spiritual father and guide. The state of his family compelled a protracted visit to this country in 1857; but, having provided for his children, he has since returned to his post in Burmah, to consecrate the remainder of life to the salvation of the heathen.

JOHN SYDNEY BEECHER, of the class of '44 and '46, was born at Hinesburg, Vt., Feb. 19, 1820. His missionary life was connected with the Rangoon and Bassein missions. As a preacher, teacher, and superintendent of native churches, he attained a high rank, and his work was greatly blessed. He returned to America in 1854, in consequence of Mrs. Beecher's ill health; but soon after went back to Burmah, and continued his labors there, with much earnestness and fidelity, until failing health compelled him to turn his face again homeward. But he died on his way to this country, at Plymouth, England, cared for and ministered to most tenderly by many friends whom God provided for him there.

EDWARD C. LORD, D. D., of the class of '44 and '46, sailed for China, Jan. 5, 1847. He was born in Carlisle, N. Y., Jan. 22, 1817. At the Institution, he was distinguished for his consistent, thorough piety, and exact scholarship. His missionary life has been spent at Ningpo, and has now extended through 24 years. He has been a quiet but successful worker as a preacher in Chinese, but is especially eminent for the extent and accuracy of his Chinese scholarship, in which he ranks among the ablest of the missionaries to China. He is now engaged on a translation of the Scriptures into one of the common dialects of that empire, under the auspices of the American Bible Union. Unostentatious, and averse to sensationalism, few men have made their lives more useful, or reached results of such permanent value to the heathen world.

W. H. HUSTED, of the class of '44, served as missionary among the North American Indians; and WM. M. JONES, also of '44, was missionary in Hayti and Palestine. See Sketches.

The class of '45, in addition to Mr. Jencks, contributed two others of their number to the heathen world, Brethren Danforth and Stoddard. They were room-mates in the Institution for years, and sailed together for Assam, Nov. 3, 1847, where they lived and labored side by side for a long period with warmest affection.

APPLETON H. DANFORTH was born in Pelham, Mass., July 8, 1817. His missionary life was spent chiefly at Gowahatti, the largest and most important station in Assam. Possessed of a mind of unusual clearness and logical power, he excelled as a preacher, especially in the colloquial method, so necessary among the heathen. Dr. Bronson says of him: "Few of the Hindoo priests were disposed to meet him a second time in argument; and his sermons and addresses awakened much discussion among the leaders of the different heathen sects. He was greatly interested in Christian education, as a means of overthrowing caste and the idolatrous system of worship." A man of warm heart, self-forgetting, and full of generous sympathy, he was a true friend, attaching all to him by the sterling worth of his character. Few men have been so successful, if judged by the difficulties overcome, and the effective work done. The failing health of Mrs. Danforth required their return to America in 1853. He settled as pastor in Milestown, near Philadelphia, attended with much success. His heart, however, was in Assam, and he prepared to return. But when his arrangements for sailing were nearly complete, he was called from the labor of earth, deeply lamented by all who knew him, but by none more than the orphaned church in Gowahatti, many of whom he had baptized.

IRA J. STODDARD, his companion, was assigned to Nowgong, with a special relation to the educational Institution there, but also preached extensively and successfully. Thoroughly devoted to his work, he accomplished much as a preacher and educator, and will long be remembered in Assam. Ill health compelled his return to this country in 1856, and several years of most important and successful labor were given to the cause of foreign missions in the West, and to the Central University at Pella, Iowa, where his accomplished, devoted wife was preceptress. In 1866, however, leaving their children in America, they sailed again for Assam, to spend the rest of life in that dark land of heathenism. He was stationed at Gowahatti, but on the breaking out of the wonderful work among the Garos, he removed to Gwalpara, where he is gathering in many precious souls from that hitherto wild and unpromising people. His work has hardly been excelled in interest in any part of the mission field. Ill health has compelled the recent return of Mrs. Stoddard, leaving our brother to stand alone, with impaired bodily strength, at that distant post.

In 1848, the University sent forth four of its members into the foreign work, three to the East, and one to the Indians in the far West; Messrs. Moore, Van Meter, Smith and Bingham.

CALVIN C. MOORE, of the class of '46, is a native of Massachusetts, born at Chesterfield, Dec. 26, 1818. He sailed Oct. 21, 1848, designated to the Burmese department of the Mission in Arracan. He was stationed at Akyab, associated with Ingalls, and subsequently with Campbell, Knapp, and Rose, and was enabled to perform much valuable labor among the heathen. But failure of health obliged him to return to this country in 1855, and he has not since been able to resume missionary work. A letter recently received from him, dated at Ontario, Knox Co., Ill., says: "My own and Mrs. Moore's health is quite poor, and unless better, I shall not be able to attend the Jubilee meeting, which I much regret. I hope good to the University may result from the meeting, and also to the lost, for whom Christ died and his people labor."

HENRY L. VAN METER was a native of Philadelphia, born Sept. 21, 1824. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania, and was a member of the Theological Class of '48 in Hamilton. He sailed Oct. 21, 1848, for Burmah, appointed to Bassein. The Pwo Karen department was ultimately assigned to his care, over which he presided with great zeal and effectiveness for many years. His work in 1868, as stated in the annual report of the Missionary Union, is a marked example of missionary earnestness. We record it as a specimen of his missionary life. The report says: "Mr. Van Meter has been very active and very busy, giving almost the entire time to jungle labors at all seasons of the year,—going out into the jungles in all thirty-two times, making eighty distinct visits, and travelling for the purpose two thousand three hundred and forty one miles, preaching from three to five times a day, making five hundred religious services." The statistics for last year in his department are: 18 churches, 52 preachers, 782 members, and 75 baptisms. His missionary life was ended in 1870. He was compelled to return. He had only time to renew his acquaintance with his children from whom he had been several years separated, when he was called away. He died at Mottville, N. Y., Aug. 18, 1870.

SAMUEL J. SMITH, of the class of '46 and '48 is a native of Cananore, Hindostan. He sailed, Oct. 9, 1848, for Bangkok to join Dr. Jones and Mr. Chandler in the Siamese department of the mission to Siam. He has ever since labored at that post. Many difficulties have embarrassed the work, and one after another of the laborers has fallen; so that large success has not attended the work. At present Mr. Smith has the sole charge of the mission.

A. JUDSON BINGHAM, of the class of '46 and '48, was born at Wheatland, N. Y., April 5, 1820. He was sent Sept., 1848, to the Ojibwa Mission at St. Mary's, where his venerated father, Rev. Abel Bingham, labored with apostolic zeal for nearly thirty years. He resigned, however, his appointment in 1850, and subsequently labored in different fields as a pastor. He left at Hamilton a worthy memory as an earnest, true man, devoted to Christ and His church. His death occurred in 1863. See Sketch.

HARVEY M. CAMPBELL, of the class of '42 and '43, sailed for Burmah, Oct. 18, 1849, designated to the Burmese department in Arracan. He was born in Lebanon, N. Y. June 8, 1823. On reaching Arracan, he was assigned to Kyouk Phyoo, the chief military station of the province, and here commenced the vigorous study of the Burman language. But just as his usefulness was becoming widely felt, he was suddenly attacked with cholera, and died Feb. 22, 1852. His memory as a noble, true Christian man is still cherished by many in Burmah and America.

HARVEY E. KNAPP, of the class of '47 and '49, was born in Denmark, Ohio, May 14, 1820, and sailed in company with Mr. Campbell for Burmah, designated to the Kemmees in Arracan. He settled at Akyab, and had only fully mastered the language and entered on his chosen work, developing all the qualities of a useful missionary, when an attack of jungle fever, followed by pulmonary difficulties, compelled his return. He died at sea, Nov. 9, 1853, and was buried in the Indian ocean, the tomb of so many noble missionaries. He was a man of gentle, but earnest spirit, fervently devoted to the Master's work.

WILLIAM WARD, D. D., of the class of '48 and '50, was born Aug., 28, 1821, and sailed for Assam, July 25, 1850. His life has since been spent in connection with that mission chiefly at Gowahatti and Sibsagor; interrupted by a brief residence in the United States, from 1858 to 1860, occasioned by the ill health of Mrs. Ward, during which he was pastor at Wellsville, N. Y. Besides extended usefulness in preaching, and editing the Onunodoi, a periodical published by the mission, and superintending the mission press in the Assamese, he is at present engaged also in the translation of the Old Testament, one sixth of which he has already completed and printed. With health feeble and precarious, he still clings with noble devotion to his post, pressing forward his important work. Visited U. S. in 1870.

WILLIAM T. BIDDLE, of the class of '49 and '51, was born in England, June 8, 1824. He was appointed to the Burman Karen Mission, but died before setting out, Sept. 16, 1851. Possessed of talents and scholarship of very high order, he had been assigned a post of instruction in the University, and his prospective life in Burmah had presage of much success. Few men have passed through the Institution whose mental and moral promise seemed higher; but God called him to an early grave. Among the last prayers offered by this earnest, consecrated man, were these words: "O Lord, pour out a missionary spirit upon all the rising ministry throughout the land. Bless that dear Institution I have left; and grant that if I should be taken away, my death may lead many of the dear young men to consecrate themselves to the missionary work!" Just before he breathed his last, he whispered, "HAPPY, HAPPY, BRIGHT, ALL BRIGHT!"

FOURTH DECADE, 1850—59.

ASA B. CABANISS, of the class of '50, after completing his theological course, was sent out by the Southern Baptist Board as a missionary to China. See Sketch, class of 1850.

THOMAS ALLEN, of the class of '50 and '52, sailed Sept. 18, 1852, designated to the Burman Karen Mission. He was stationed at Tavoy, and labored earnestly and effectively as a preacher and guide of the native churches. The state of Mrs. Allen's health, however, compelled his return in 1859. See sketch, 1850.

A. TAYLOR ROSE, of the class of '50 and '52, was born in Steuben Co., N. Y., April, 1823. He sailed Jan. 17, 1853, designated to the Burmans in Arracan where he settled at Akyab. After much valuable labor, he was called to the charge of the government school, still continuing, however, to preach to the Burmans and perform much other missionary work. He resumed full mission work in 1862 at Rangoon, with which station he is still connected. His life has been one of great activity and usefulness in all departments of missionary labor.

A fever contracted in one of his preaching tours in 1868 has at length compelled him to seek relief by change. Leaving his family in Rangoon, this laborious, earnest missionary is now in this country, seeking health for future work.

J. LORIMER DOUGLASS, of the class of '50, sailed December 12, 1853, designated to the Burman mission at Bassein, where for fifteen years his life has been mostly spent, interrupted only by a visit to America on account of Mrs. Douglass' health, in 1860. Mr. Douglass is a man of commanding powers. His many and masterly addresses during this visit, inspired as they were with a holy enthusiasm, will be remembered during the lifetime of a generation. His labors have been largely blessed in the ingathering of souls and in the work of education. (See sketch, class of '50).

DANIEL WHITAKER, of the class of '50, was born at Downs, N J., November 17, 1822. After completing his college course at Hamilton, and his theological at Rochester, he sailed for Burmah in company with Messrs. Bixby and Rose, January 17, 1853. He joined the Maulmain Karen Mission, but was afterwards transferred to the Toungoo, to preside amidst the wonderful scenes of ingathering connected with Sau Quala's ministry. Self-forgetting, and wholly devoted to the salvation of the Karens, he was early worn down with over-work, and died in Maulmain, August 18, 1857. The life of this consecrated servant of Christ was one of apostolic activity in preaching tours, in training native teachers and preachers, and in guiding the native churches. Under date of January, 1857, the year of his death, he writes: "In my late tour I baptized 233, administered the Lord's Supper 12 times, constituted seven new churches, occupied ten new stations with teachers, besides attending the Paku association. It is the Lord's doings, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

MESSRS. LEWIS SMITH and H.W. REED, of the class of '46, and J. MILTON SHAW, of the class of '50, went forth to New Mexico, then essentially a foreign field, though under the auspices of the Home Mission Society. After much earnest labor, all some years since retired from the mission.

H. B. SHERMER, of the class of '50, was a native of Philadelphia, and sailed for the mission to the Bassas, West Africa, November 27, 1852. But the climate, as in the case of nearly all white missionaries, forbade his stay. His wife fell an early victim and died, and his own health became so impaired as to compel him to return to America in 1853, and relinquish further mission work.

ROBERT TELFORD, of the class of '51, as far as the Senior year, was designated to reinforce the Chinese department of the mission in Siam, and reached Bangkok, June 24, 1854. He was subsequently transferred to the mission in Southern China. After a career of great usefulness, extending through ten years, he was obliged to return to this country on account of Mrs. Telford's health, where he still remains, but continuing to labor effectively for the cause of missions.

MILES J. KNOWLTON, D. D., of the class of '51 and '53, is a native of Vermont, born at West Wardsboro, February 8, 1825. He sailed for China December 10, 1853, designated to Ningpo, where he has had an unbroken ministry of more than fifteen years. He has baptized over 260 Chinese converts, being an average of about 17 per year. His energy, tact, and thorough consecration have rendered his work in the highest degree effective in all the departments of the service. In a letter recently received he makes the following estimate of the influence of Hamilton on his life: "The influence of Madison University on my life and life-work, in a literary and intellectual point of view, has probably been as beneficial as could have been derived from any similar institution in the United States; while in its religious and missionary influence—that influence which is peculiarly adapted to the moulding of the ministerial and missionary character—it is my settled conviction that Madison University stands superior to any similar institution in the world. Its power in these respects, upon my own mind, was most profound and abiding. If I were to attempt to analyze the religious and missionary influences of the Institution, I would name:

“First, the spirit of evangelical piety that pervaded its every department. Most of the students were not only pious, but were also studying for the ministry; and their daily devotions in their rooms, their frequent devotional social meetings were marked by hearty devotion, thorough Christian experience, and deep-toned piety. They were mostly from the middle walks in life, and came, not to squander money or foster ambitious schemes, but with the simple desire to be better prepared to do service for God and truth. They found a congenial atmosphere around them. They came to an Institution born and reared in answer to the prayers and tears and strong faith of its founders and patrons. They found a body of men occupying its professors' chairs, possessing a like spirit with its founders,—men of God, of evangelical piety, of prayer and faith, and deeply imbued with the missionary spirit. Dr. Nathaniel Kendrick, though languishing on a bed of pain and suffering, still labored for the spiritual good of the institution, counselling and praying with the students, who visited his bedside, with paternal interest. Those visits are among my most cherished recollections of Hamilton.

“Secondly, the missionary spirit constituted another vital element in the atmosphere of the Institution. This was fostered by the early founders, and from the very beginning was an essential feature in the Institution. The devout student could not fail to catch the prevailing spirit. In my own experience, I soon came to feel that I occupied high and holy ground, where my mind was constantly directed to every part of the missionary field, and where at length I was constrained to lay myself on the foreign missionary altar.” A premium tract on “China as a Missionary Field,” written by Dr. Knowlton, has been issued by the Bible and Publication Society.

GEORGE P. WATROUS, of the class of '52, as far as the Junior year, sailed for Burmah, October 15, 1854. He was born in Chester, Conn., January 10, 1825. He joined the Mission in Shwaygyeen in 1855, but, after much useful labor, he was compelled by ill health to return to America in 1860. (See class of '52.)

JOHN B. JONES, of the class of '52, as far as the Junior year, was designated to the Cherokee Indians in 1855. He is the son of the venerable Evan Jones, for forty years a devoted missionary apostle among the Cherokees, and was baptized in 1844, by John Wickliffe, a native preacher. After devotedly working with his father five years, he resigned September 20, 1860. (See Sketch, 1852.)

CYRUS F. TOLMAN, of the class of '56, went to Assam. He was born in Meridian, N. Y., October 25, 1832, and sailed for Nowgong, November, 1858. He had just entered effectively on the work, having already made a tour of exploration on the Mikir Hills, when disease prostrated him, and made return to America necessary in 1861. He is now one of the efficient secretaries of the Missionary Union in the Western District.

JAMES R. HASWELL, of the class of '57 and '59, son of the veteran missionary Haswell, was born in Amherst, Burmah, in 1836. He sailed for Burmah, September 26, 1859, to toil side by side with his father, in the Maulmain Burman mission. Here he at once entered on labor with great power and success, having already full command of the language. Ill health, however, obliged him to return February, 1863. Having partially recovered, his ardent spirit induced him again to accept an appointment, and on February 5, 1870, he a second time reached his chosen field, and is laboring in Maulmain and vicinity with success.

HORACE JENKINS, of the class of '57 and '59, was born in Ashfield, Mass., in 1832. He arrived at Ningpo, China, March 22, 1860, and has continued without interruption earnestly engaged in Chinese evangelization. His heroic, persistent efforts to establish a mission at King-hwa, continued through two years past, demonstrate his earnestness, tact and energy. In 1869 he was located at Shou-hing, an inland city said to be larger than Ningpo, and situated in a densely populated district. He is now doing effective service for the gospel at Hang Chou, having charge of three churches, four stations, and seven native helpers.

EBENEZER EDWARDS, of the Jun. Theo. class in '59, is a native of Wales, born March 7, 1825. He was some time under appointment for Assam; but, in consequence of the Indian mutiny, was detained, and the subsequent failure of Mrs. Edwards' health compelled him to relinquish the work.

FIFTH DECADE, 1860-'69.

J. GOBLE, a member of the Theo. class of 1860, is a native of England. He was connected with the expedition of Com. Perry to Japan, some years since, and became deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of that wonderful people. After spending some time in preparatory studies at this Institution, he sailed for Japan, relying on his own resources, under God, for support. Possessed of great energy of character, he has performed much effective missionary work there, and is now engaged in the translation of the Bible into the Japanese language.

JUSTUS B. VINTON, of the class of '60, son of the veteran missionary of that name, was born in Burmah, March, 1840. He sailed for Burmah Aug. 17, 1861, as an independent missionary to the Karens, near Rangoon. The younger Haswell says of him: "The Karens under his care have advanced wonderfully in ability and disposition to help themselves. He is sustained entirely by them and his own means, without any help from this country. He has great success in setting the natives themselves at work; has established a school system which is beyond anything of the kind in all the East, and has about 2000 pupils. He has himself, with the Karens, set up a complete printing office, for the publication of books and papers for the Karens. He cut the punches, punched the matrices, and cast the type himself. The office is worked entirely by Karens, under his supervision, and the work turned out is equal to any in Burmah. His principal work has been in preaching to the heathen, and the care and direction of some two thousand Christians, gathered in 34 churches, with over 40 native preachers.

EDWARD P. SCOTT, of the Theo. class of '60, was born in Greensboro, Vt., 1832. He graduated at Knox College, Ill., and, after completing a course of theology here, after some detention, he sailed for Assam, June 9, 1862. He labored with great zeal among the Mikirs; but died of cholera at Nowgong, May 18, 1869. Rev. Dr. Warren, secretary of the Miss. Union, writes of him: "A manly man was he, and a fully developed Christian. In missionary character he stood pre-eminent; few equalled, and none, so far as the range of our vision extended, surpassed him. He had breadth, tact, facility of movement, persistence, and genuine force. I think he possessed uncommon power to lay hold of men, and mould their character. His crowning excellence was his Christian spirit, moving through all, giving tone to all, never forsaking him. His devotion was whole-hearted, exclusive, a fire that burned to the last moment of life. To my mind, his only fault was overwork." Dr. Bronson, his senior colleague, says of him: "Multitudes of inquiring heathen, especially those of the better educated class, were drawn around him. With rare talent in teaching, he was raising a company of efficient teachers and preachers. He has done a good and great work. The sickle has fallen from his hand, while the ripe harvest field still waves before us. Who will take up the work he has so successfully begun?"

Within the last decade, a wonderful work of God has been in progress in Sweden, under the leadership of the devoted Wiberg. The sleep of formalism, so long continued there, has been broken; and God's pure word, uttered with singular power, has moved the souls of multitudes. State persecution has been in vain. Churches of Apostolic model have everywhere sprung up. In 1868, so widespread and mighty had been the movement, there were in Sweden 201 Baptist churches, with 7900 members. To aid in this great work, especially in the training of a native ministry, our Alma Mater has sent forth three of her sons, Broady, Edgren, and Truve.

KNUT OSCAR BROADY, of the class of '61, is a native of Sweden, and was converted in New York, under the labors of the devoted city missionary, George Hatt. At the close of his college course, during the late war, he patriotically enlisted in the cause of his adopted country. At the close of the war, he entered into a pastorate. His heart, however, was in Sweden; and in 1867, he was sent to Stockholm, as preacher and instructor in the Theological school. Possessed of a mind of no ordinary power, and a high order of scholarship, he gives much promise of extended usefulness.

JOHN A. EDGREN, of the Theo. Class of '67, is a native of Stockholm, Sweden. He sailed with Mr. Broady in 1867, and was also appointed to the Theological School in that city. He removed to Upsala, the seat of the national University. In 1870, the poor health of Mrs. Edgren compelled his return to the United States, and he is laboring successfully among his countrymen, in Chicago, Ill.

THEODORE TRUVE, of Gottenberg, Sweden, spent two years and a half in studies at Hamilton, connected with the class of '69. He went out in the spring of 1868, and is now stationed as pastor in his native town. His work has already been followed with cheering results.

MOUNG KYAW is a native of Burmah, born in Rangoon, March 5, 1843. He was converted after reaching this country, and united with the Baptist church in Hamilton. After spending nearly ten years in study, four of which were connected with the University, he sailed for Burmah. Few men have given more evidences of consecration, self-reliance, persistent energy, associated with mental ability, than this devoted young Burman. (See Sketch, Class '68.)

W. I. KNAPP, class '60, and J. W. TERRY, Theological class of '65, are laboring with marked zeal and success as missionaries in Spain, amidst the wonderful revival of God's work in that land of Catholic superstition. (See Sketch, class '60.)

RECAPITULATION.

The Institution, during her half-century life, has consecrated seventy-five of her sons on the altar of foreign missions; in the first decade, six; in the second, twenty-four; in the third, twenty-one; in the fourth, fifteen; in the fifth, nine. Of this number, nineteen have died in the foreign service; [twenty-two, 1871].

Thirty have returned mostly with shattered health, after years of toil and sacrifice ; and twenty-six are still at work, earnestly laboring at different posts in the heathen world.

It is impossible to survey this long array of noble names, many of them among the most distinguished in the annals of modern missions, without a grateful sense of what our Alma Mater has done, under God, for the evangelization of the heathen. The work they have accomplished for Christ, no human mind can measure ; and the influences they have set in motion through the press, through the native churches and ministry, and through many thousands of souls converted to God, must continue, with ever widening power, a blessing in the earth till time shall end.

God grant that this sacred Institution, now entering with increased power its second half-century, may ever be true to its high and holy mission ; and that, in the years to come, a host of other consecrated men, trained here amidst holy influences for their great work, may go forth to the nations sitting in darkness ; until the work of missions is done, and " the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ !"

POEM

DELIVERED BEFORE THE ADELPHIAN AND AEONIAN SOCIETIES,

By B. F. TAYLOR, Esq., Class of 1838.

ALL HAIL, old Chenango! Grand fallow of God!
For He ploughed this one b^out—turned grandly this sod,
And some spring, like a lamb, broke away from its tether,
And they went—this first Baptist, born of wet weather—
The Lord and His river down the furrow together!
Blue sky to green hills so lovingly bent,
That azure and emerald melted and blent,
And so, to this Valley is graciously given
A little of Earth and a great deal of Heaven.

When beatitudes fell, angels hovered and heard;
Oh, give me one breath of the air that they stirred,—
One gasp of their grandeur, those stately old psalms!
Fresh from Lebanon's cedars or Palestine's palms!
I would fashion them all into words if I might,
And lay them alive on this altar to-night—
I would say, "Let us sing! JUBILATE, AMEN!"
Be the Sixty-sixth Psalm born over again!
For the Fathers who followed this furrow of God,
And planted a germ where Divinity trod;
For the old-fashioned Hearts no woman survives,
That beat full and warm all the days of their lives,
Whose tears softened Bethel's cold pillow of stone,
Whose prayers bore their sorrows straight up to the throne,
Whose love wrought the rounds in the ladder of glory,
And angels descended to write down the story.

From this hill of the Prophets that ladder is lifted,
 Forms dawn their way down, as when daybreak has drifted
 To the rim of the world and right over the bar,
 On a breaker of glory, its darling and star.
 As a lark bursts away from the clod to the cloud,
 And the folds of white silence are throbbing aloud,
 So they sing a glad anthem like spirits forgiven,
 In the sweet and unwritten Ionic of heaven :
 For the strange inspiration that kindled the twain*
 Who took fire from Isaiah in bosom and brain,
 And embroidered the age on whose border they stood,
 When they deeded this homestead forever to God.

Ay, old-fashioned pair! Not three-fourths of an age
 Can cloud up your grand story that blazons the page—
 How ye bowed on this hill and bequeathed with a vow
 That faith of the “ then ” to this hope of the “ now.”
 Old Sexton, begone! Strike their names from the stone—
 Hearts were made before tablets! We'll give them our own!
 For the grand old Thirteen † fifty-two years ago,
 Their graves with the amaranth lovingly strow—
 Who stood in this Valley with breast and brow bare,
 And warbled a song and wafted a prayer,
 And then passed in a breath—each Issachar's son,
 Each wilderness Baptist, a sturdy old John,
 From the flush of the cross to the flash of the crown,
 For they said: of this handful of silver we bring,
 By and by shall be fashioned a key for the King,
 That shall wheel back the bolts and sublimely unlock
 In the heart of these hills God's ledges of rock.

Swing them out to the light! They're a temple begun,
 Whence round the broad planet flaming heralds shall run!

* Hon. SAMUEL PAYNE and his wife, seventy-five years ago, knelt on the hill where the University buildings now stand, and vowed that if prospered, they would devote all to God. They were prospered, and the vow was fulfilled.

• † The thirteen men who met at Hamilton in 1817, and contributed one dollar each, the first offering towards founding the University.

From foundation to dome the temple is done,
 And the clock of the Jubilee just striking "one!"
 The key is a sceptre, the sceptre a sword,
 And the mite of the widow the might of the Lord.
 Thirteen stars to the flag, grown so broad and so bright,
 'Tis a fragment of heaven outwatching the night!
 Thirteen men to the Vale yoke the world with a chime,
 Till thousands are bidding good-morning to Time!
 Thirteen dollars to God! Thirteen kernels of corn!
 Earth rustles with harvests—the reapers are born!
 Ho, warder aloft! Strike the ages again!
 God bless the Thirteen! JUBILATE, AMEN!

The aloe that blossoms in beauty to-night,
 And flashed all at once on the soul and the sight,
 Had made ready to bloom ere these quarries began
 To the glory of God and the levers of man
 To give up their dead; ere these thresholds grew sweet
 As a rose in the rain, to the music of feet.
 And yet, fifty years catch their breath as they come,
 Strike eight hundred millions all dusty and dumb,
 Bid them fall into line front face to the stars,
 Make the gentle earth brave with millions of scars,
 And so wrap the great globe in those mantles of theirs
 That it ought to grow kin with the garments it wears.

Stately Mother of men, forever good-morn!
 Call the roll loud and clear! Thou art never forlorn:
 Thy boys by battalion are coming and going—
 Bearded grain all the while and not a flower growing.
 On thy fiftieth year, oh, Mother of ours,
 Bless the booted brigades with a handful of flowers;
 With thy boys give the world now and then a sweet girl,
 And we'll name thee anew dear "Mother of Pearl!"
 Sarah's children were nations—thy children are men,
 The roll is resplendent—oh, call it again.
 Ho, ABBOTT and VINTON! Ho, THOMAS and REED!

Is Arracan dumb? Will Burmah take heed?
 Give them up, oh ye realms! Unlock the dead lips,
 Where ye sit with your gods in a mighty eclipse.

A song flutters up to the world's drowsy brim!
 As I live 'tis a breath of sweet Bethlehem's hymn,
 Drifted out from God's choir when His gates were ajar,
 Floated down to the earth upon Bethlehem's star;
 'Tis Silver Street, Corinth, Coronation or Mear,
 The dead speak with tongues and the answer is "HERE!"
 Ah, melodious tongues! Fifty heralds abroad,
 Who marched hence out of Christendom grandly for God!
 Oh, Mother of Spartans, awake or asleep
 Those heralds of glory thy calendar keep.
 Dash the records aside and banish all fear,
 For it beats like a clock, a herald a year!
 My heart, oh ye Brothers, runs over the brim,
 And the prose of my life breaks into a hymn,
 When I think of the feet that have trodden these halls,
 When I think of the words that enchanted these walls:—
 The beautiful feet of the radiant throng
 Who walked upon thorns with a smile and a song,
 Whose route, all the way, you can follow along,
 As if with red roses their footprints had blushed,
 Which they as they went had scattered and crushed,
 Till it sweetened the air and reddened the dust.

The eloquent words, that did never give token
 Their old Saxon bondage would ever be broken,
 And they turn to such tones as the Tropics can speak,
 And lighten in Latin and thunder in Greek.
 My heart is a Hebrew as I think of those men,
 And I slowly read backward life's volume again.
 I see KENDRICK's grand form towering up like a king's,
 I hear accents at first, like the waving of wings;
 Now he warms with his theme into true welding weather,

And the word and the blow are delivered together ;
 The thought and the thinker are all in a glow,—
 The glasses he whirls from his dome of a brow,
 His words that were halting grow freer and bolder,
 And he strikes for the truth straight out from the shoulder :
 It is Gabriel's trumpet and Gideon's sword,
 'Tis the pillar of fire and the breath of the Lord,
 It is crash after crash with the tables of stone,
 'Tis the thrill of the thunder, the dread of the throne,
 The gloom of the tempest, Jehovah alone.
 Now a shaft of pure sunshine shivers the cloud
 And splashes with glory the woof of the shroud ;
 Bow blazing above, birds singing below,
 How softer and sweeter his cadences grow !
 It was Sinai before, it is Calvary now !
 Then the splendor aslant of the afternoon sun
 Built through the church windows, when sermon was done,
 Of brave timbers of gold a visible stair,
 As if he would follow hard after his prayer.

Then the girls that sang alto, the girls that sang air,
 Stood up in their place in the old-fashioned choir,
 And they floated my heart—they all had it before—
 Straight outward to sea and right up to the shore,
 "The bright shining shore" where they all stand in light—
 Oh, Prince of thy tribe ! Oh, Singers, good night !

There's a flock of white tablets flecking this hill,
 Lettered sheep of the Lord's, so solemn and still.
 Break the strange breathless charm ! Ye living, make room !
 Behold hand in hand the pale Fathers do come—
 Where else should they be when their children get home !
 Look where the Pleiades glow before God,
 Look where Arcturus is spangling the sod :
 Oh, strange contradiction—so far and so near !
 The star is in Heaven but the dew-drop is here !

How dead comrades glide back in hushed Indian file,
 And a tear, like old Jacob, prevails with a smile.
 They have gone out of time and they walk in disguise—
 They have faded away as the summer day dies,
 When the pearl, gold and crimson all tempered and blended
 Strike through into heaven, and the pageant is ended.
 Do ye think we are crushed out of loving and living
 By the fall of a clod, when the planet is giving
 To the delicate foot of an ounce of a wren,
 And then surging right up as she lifts it again?
 Oh, Gibeon's Sun! He is yet under orders,
 You can halt him to-day on death's gloomy borders:
 Bid brave thoughts and grand deeds the dead Joshua play—
 "Stand still, mighty Sun!" and the blaze shall obey.

Take a page of blind JOHN that angels have tramped
 Till it looks as if stars broke ranks and encamped—
 So strown about with fine gold from Ormus and Ind
 That you wonder how angels could ever have sinned,
 When old English brocade at such exquisite cost,
 To tell the strange story of "Paradise Lost"
 Did bankrupt the bard, and so nothing remained
 To tell us the story of Eden "Regained."
 Look down on the page and declare if you can
 What business the grave-digger had with the man!
 Dare Hamlet's own sexton or one of his tribe
 Lay an ounce of dead clay upon Cromwell's old scribe?
 Those angels of his—they have put them to rout!
 Those angels of his—they have lifted him out!
 As free of the ages as the winds of the waves,
 And abolished that gloomy old fashion of graves!

In this August of grace, in some year of our Lord,
 Men attacked with a fagot the soul of a word;
 Ah, hundreds of years Christmas carols were sung
 Ere they dwelt in this world and spoke in our tongue

Who groped in the ashes where martyrs were chained,
 If perchance a live coal of the embers remained,
 And they blew it to life in the name of the kings,
 And the books of this MILTON took to their wings
 Like his own bird-of-paradise crimson and gold,
 And the princes grew warm as the ashes grew cold !
 —'Twas as if some old Vandal should vainly aspire
 To strike David dumb by just burning his lyre ;—
 The books played Elijah—left their mantle behind,
 And it fell and unfurled, till it kindled mankind.

And that Prince of all Pilgrims, the other twin JOHN,—
 He will walk in his sleep till the ages are gone.
 Blow softly, oh, Angel ! Let him slumber right on,
 With the swing of the sledge for the music of flutes
 He beat up the world for celestial recruits ;—
 He dreamed himself through to the " Beautiful Gate,"
 With " Christian " for comrade and " Mercy " to wait.
 Time's sentries cry " halt ! " Hark the sturdy reply :
 Oh, be lifted, ye gates, for old BUNYAN goes by !
 Pass on, grand crusader ! Hearts warm to thy name,
 Good-night to thy form but good-morn to thy fame !

Augustan-born Month of the loose golden zone,
 There is more in thy heart and far sweeter in tone
 Than the rasp of the scythe and the rustle and sweep
 When they rock in their cradles the harvest to sleep.
 Oh, yellow-haired Laura, richest Roman of time !
 There is that in thy story to make thee sublime.
 August-born to some world, HALLECK gave thee his lyre,
 And BONAPARTE, thunder, and FREDERICK, fire,
 DRAKE flaunted his flag in the face of the foe,
 SCOTT lifted his harp from the heather below,
 And WALTON, the Angler, in shadow reclined,
 Dropped a line in thy brooks and a line to mankind.
 The bard of all " Seasons " with thee is at rest,

And the sword-song of KORNER is laid on thy breast
 Where WALLACE takes breath and where RICHARD is dead—
 Oh, blue-bells of Scotland! Oh, roses of red!

What pulses immortal have shaken thy soul :
 When the blacksmith of Bennington "beat the long roll"—
 When the squadrons of Marlborough clouded the air,
 Swooped down on the Gaul as he lay in his lair
 And crushed him to death with the clash of their wings,
 Till Britain with Blenheim exultantly rings.
 Why, the breath of great guns was first blended with thine,*
 When that gone August day was baptized with such wine
 As was poured out at Cressy by Philip of France
 'Mid the shock of the charge and the flash of the lance.
 'Twas the tongue of artillery learning to talk,
 First audible beat of the gray friar's clock
 That rang them all dumb, just beginning to tell
 How near it can "time" a great battle to hell.

In August, the ocean was sprinkled with Spain
 As if her Armada came down in the rain,
 And Herschel so grandly bombarded the night
 That her squadrons all swung battle-lanterns a-light,
 When his telescope broke through the welkin's blue shell
 And he went where the angels began to rebel,
 And strange stars blossomed round him like daisies in June,
 Two mornings at once, on the splendor of noon !
 And death-proof it all made him if anything could !

'Twas in August, they say, when Columbus's brood Slipped silently out from the earth's azure eaves,
 —Like a flock of young swallows when summer-time leaves,—
 And plumed up their pinions and parted the blue,
 And the sky was unrent and the trinity through !

*Cannon invented by a Franciscan, were first fired in August and at Cressy.

Shook off the old world and shook out for the new!
 Were they shrived ere they went? Were their sins all forgiven?
 For they'll flutter their wings at the windows of heaven!
 Hark! The Admiral's hail: "World ahoy! Whither bound?"
 And the answer comes back on a breaker of sound,
 And the flag of the Andes in fire is unfurled,
 And Niagara's thunder of welcome is hurled,
 "We're at anchor, your honor! It is Liberty's World!"

Magnificent Age! When water and fire,
 The lamb and the lion, together conspire,
 And the atom of rain the robins are drinking
 Can set the dull iron to throbbing and thinking.
 It enters the heart of a ship in her sleep—
 There's a cloud on the sky—a wake on the deep—
 There's a soul in the oak that would kindle a king,
 And she crashes away without lifting a wing!

Take the old "Franklin Press" where the dead were laid out,
 And the printer in mourning went plodding about,
 Till a creak and a groan broke the pages' repose,
 And the spectres in sheets, one by one, in their clothes,
 To a late resurrection reluctantly rose!
 Now inspire the machine with flood and with flame,
 And call it a brother and give it a name!
 It comes down to the work with a will and a clank,
 Smites the type in the face and the wrong in the flank;
 In the flash of an eye the creature has caught
 And kindled and glowed with the life of the thought!
 Stand clear of the thing! It is nearing the brink
 Where a being unborn is beginning to think!
 It flutters its plumage, and drifts the world white—
 And it snows down the ages its treasures of light!
 It flutters its plumage—this marvellous bird,—
 Put a lock on your heart and beware of the word
 That it pulses abroad, for creation has heard!

The lightning's vernacular thunder is dumb,
 The bolts strike the word, talk English and come,
 The surge tells the billow, the breakers repeat,
 Till the waves of the sea wash the word to your feet,
 Dry-shod from the anchorage down in the brine,
 Swung up by the cable, a creature divine.

See the forge's first born with its sinews of steel,
 A nerve at each lever and axle and wheel,
 All ready to fly and just ready to feel,
 Pluck out of its caskets great handfuls of power,
 The flocks of mankind all shorn in an hour
 And the fleeces just granted this thing for a dower,
 To weave as it went a wonderful robe
 To be flung on the sea and apparel the globe !
 Born last of a furnace and first of a dream,
 It learned elocution from eagles that scream ;
 Lo, the flash of its eye as it kindles the track
 With the wild at its front and the world at its back !

I beg you to think of the pioneer's stroke
 That the sleep of the wilderness lazily broke :
 The blow of that axe was the beat of the clock
 That timed the whole route from Plymouth's gray rock.
 Now you bend your ear down to the marvellous wire,
 That orbit man strung for articulate fire,—
 For globe and for lightning a nerve and a lyre,—
 And you start at a grander chronometer's beat,
 As strong and distinct as a step in the street,
 Away there in the desert, away here in the mart,
 So near that you think it the beat of your heart,
 When the silver-bound laurel lay fast in its place,*
 And they gave to the work its finishing grace,
 And you heard with your soul when the hammer let fall,

* The ceremonies of laying the last rail of the road across the Continent.

Drove the golden spike home for good and for all !
 That couplet of iron—match the line if you can,
 The grandest of epics yet uttered by man—
 Has heaved up the sky, reft the blue from the green !
 See the western horizon sublimely careen
 To let in the East and its kingdoms between !

Now thanks be to God for the "Holy Alliance"
 That flings down the glove to the grave in defiance ;
 For the fine gold of truth, for the blessèd Mount Zion ;
 For the water and fire, the lamb and the lion ;
 For the thunder that whispers as westward it wheels,
 The earth at its heart and the sun at its heels.
 With these angels of record all ready to write,
 With these heralds of wonder all ready for flight,
 We can never be dead. There is nothing at rest
 From the thought in your soul to the Blue of the Blest !
 The Moon in her mourning will cross the great Sun,*
 And the dews will be shed for the glory undone,
 Like the clasp of an arm the horizon will bend,
 And the sky will come down like an intimate friend,
 And the stars will look out as the pageant goes by,
 And, withdrawn for a breath from the glance of his eye,
 They will wonder to see the meridian line
 All tarnished and dim forgetting to shine.

She will walk without song, and the trail of her robe
 Like a zone of stray night will be swept round the globe,
 And will cleave the broad day and will part it in twain
 As if Jordan and mantle were meeting again !
 Do ye fear that magnificent spark of the Lord
 Is sheathed in the shadow to rust like a sword ?
 Now see him put on his imperial crown,
 Like the "glory" that curved in the vision of John,

* Alluding to the total eclipse of the sun, which occurred August 7th, 1869,

And, a king's counted ransom right royally told,
Behold "Bailly's beads" of ineffable gold!
With one flash of his falchion shall glory be born,
From the bosom of day break forth the young morn,
And the moon wander on disrobed and forlorn;
Of her garments of gloom not a tatter or trace,
The frailest of flowerets stand up in their place;
The hope that was budding,—yet yours if you will;
The tear you were shedding is clinging there still;
The shadow is gone like the ghost of a night,
Like the column by day to the Israelite!
Then the birds to their songs and the dews to their wings!
And the glory we give to the KING OF THE KINGS.

HISTORY OF THE ENDOWMENT.—On the settlement of the Removal Controversy, August, 1850, the UNIVERSITY had no funds, but the following Liabilities :

P. B. Spear's Pledge to Removalists.....	$3,325 00
Notes against Madison University.....	4,017 32

Before interest on endowment accrued making.....	$30,625 92

which the University from time to time paid off, clearing from debt both the University and Education Society. The above sum has no representation.

But the following, paid by the University, though unproductive, has a representation of permanent value :

For the Hall of the Alumni and Friends.....	$20,057 63
President's House and other Real Estate.....	12,242 56
Building Improvements and Natural History.....	16,938 92
Baptist Education Society, Apparatus, &c.....	9,950 85
Total.....	$59,189 96

Independently of the above, and with no agency for the past seven years except that of the Treasurer, the Invested Funds have moved as follows:

There were secured from the subscription of 1850-1.....*	$53,859 37
In August, 1864, this became	62,832 36
“ “ 1865, “ “	121,143 99
“ “ 1866, “ “	147,053 33
“ “ 1868, “ “	177,800 00
“ “ 1870, “ “	255,130 00
“ “ 1871, “ “	266,620 36

Or thus,—To the Old Endowment of 1850-1 add that of the “Colgate Plan” of 1864, netting, after paying debts, $43,736.23; to this add Spear's Special Subscription of $82,594, and to this the Jubilee Fund, less $6,481.62, and you make the sum of $266,620.36.

We have not gone back beyond 1850, because “the Endowment” had no place in history previous to this date. The UNIVERSITY, in 20 years, besides the heavy current expense account, has raised $356,000, nor does this include the B. E. S. account.

P. B. SPEAR,
Treasurer M. U.

ON

Increasing the Facilities of the University.

The views of your Committee on this subject are shaped by one leading idea: The idea that education at Hamilton was conceived, has been conducted, and should ever be modelled with the design of supplying laborers for the Lord's fields. However worthy and honorable it may be for states, communities, or public-spirited men to establish eminent seats of learning for merely secular purposes, we do not suppose it desirable or desired, that Hamilton should leave its work of God to serve such an ambition. The increased facilities sought for, therefore, are only such as will furnish the Institution to do more and better in its characteristic work, wherein it has already done so much and so well.

In attempting to indicate the directions where this sacred design calls for enlargement in the means for its execution, we begin where the Fathers began, with the Theological Seminary.

If anywhere on this continent Baptists should have a Theological Seminary fully equipped and completely manned, it is at Hamilton, where, in fact as well as in theory, in the present life as well as in the past history, ministerial education is the all-pervading purpose and spirit. For this our Institution is and was created. For this the primary care must be exercised.

It is a joy to see, in the large classes pursuing the preparatory and college courses, the scores of manly sons of the churches, all animated by the one spirit of consecration to the work of preaching the Gospel. And where should these on-moving ranks of consecrated men be able to see a better theological seminary than that which is the crown of their own University? Here, last of all places, should this department be of secondary rank. The student of highest Christian aims and aspirations should be able to see here before him a theological course whose extent in the years allotted to it, in the breadth of its studies and the eminence of its chairs, may challenge comparison with the best.

To attain this, in these times when high Christian enterprise and unexampled liberality are rearing or perfecting such noble seminaries over the land, will call for immediate and generous provisions for enlargement. To fail of this is to fail of bringing to its proper fruit the entire spirit and life of our educational work.

The good stewards must be found—and who will not covet to be one of them?—who will endow another theological chair. And the best ability of the denomination must be brought to occupy the new seat, and to continue in the old ones as they become vacant.

In the judgment of the Committee, another direction where the design of our Institution requires enlargement of facilities, is in the provision for a broader study of the languages. Especially that the course in Modern Languages may embrace a wider range and higher practical thoroughness. The leading languages of all the nations to be evangelized might well claim to be taught here—not only for the preparation of laborers for foreign fields, but in view of the general immigration, which makes the gift of tongues necessary for the most successful labor in numberless portions of our own country.

Why should not the Chinese language and the Burmese, if not other leading tongues of Asia, be here taught?—relieving the foreign missionary of some of those tedious years of toil and waiting after getting upon his field, that now oppress and sometimes exhaust him before he can break his message to those to whom he is sent, and qualifying others to work amid the millions of visitors and residents in our country who speak those languages. Especially why not this, when veteran laborers from these foreign fields, with their languages thoroughly mastered, are often obliged to spend years amongst us, which it would rejoice them to devote in some part to the drilling of new recruits for their departments of service?

The languages of Europe, for similar reasons, as well as to open a direct access to their science and literature, are urging increasing claims for a more adequate practical study.

These better facilities should be an increase in the department of languages, not at all a displacement of the ancient classics and vehicles of Bible inspiration, which must ever lie amid the foundations of that culture that makes a Christian laborer master of his work.

Another manifest direction where enlargement is demanded is the domain of the natural sciences. Christian workers in all spheres, must be placed by their education on more advanced ground in this field. Natural science is becoming more and more vitally practical, controlling and elevating all the industries of life, and inspiring the most varied and skilled researches. Christian leaders must be able to hold their place in the front here, or be unscrupulously pushed to the rear.

The fact, too, that men of skeptical and infidel character arrogantly appropriate the natural sciences to themselves as their specialty, demands of institutions like ours a full vindication of the title of genuine Christianity, as the only true interpreter of nature, no less than of revelation.

An adequate Laboratory is a first and most urgent necessity. A well-furnished Observatory is scarcely behind or less pressing in its claims. An enlarged and suitably accommodated Cabinet Collection for illustrating all the studies of nature, is indispensable.

The liberal beginning which has been made in this direction, by those most generous and intelligent friends of the University, the brethren Colgate and Trevor, should inspire a similar wisdom in others, and make speedily sure such a furnishing of all the branches of scientific study as shall place them on their just eminence.

It is probably felt by all, also, that the department of History and Literature should have a considerable increase of its facilities. The writers for the Press, as well as the Pulpit, in the present and coming generations, should have here one of their leading schools. For the left wing of the army of the Lord will be turned, when liberalists, and rationalists, and contemners of regenerate piety are in the lead, as the writers of an age; as the right wing would be turned if such minds led in the preaching of an age. Our journalists, reviewers, book writers, lecturers, (if they are to be perpetuated,) and other literary authors, must work from the Christian starting point and toward Christian ends, whatever other forms than religious their work may take. What so likely to secure such writers as that they come out from the mould of a really Christian Institution?

The broad scholarship, essential in fitting for the profession of teaching, and so desirable in those who practise the other professions of the learned, should be offered most of all by such Institutions as look primarily to the Christian usefulness of those whom they educate.

Our Library here should be of the best. Our Art Illustrations of history, literature and the fine arts, should be at least respectable; and the leadership of able instruction be offered to such as desire, and are permitted to extend their culture in these directions.

And of course the library and other choice collections should have an appropriate fire-proof building, under the supervision of a proficient librarian.

The means for useful physical exercise in labor, or play, or both, should be perhaps more adequately furnished, and placed under such supervision as to secure their regular and most beneficial use.

It is to be wisely considered whether the means of increasing the salaries of the professors, should not be made available from this day. Are the men who are expending their lives here, placing at our service all that they have invested in their life-studies and literary accumulations, receiving that generous compensation which the Christian spirit in their brethren would prompt? Or are they cramped for the means to furnish themselves liberally with the implements of their work, and provide justly for their households? If the latter, a half-century should suffice for such burden-bearing—to which no longer, as once, the plea of necessity can reconcile them or their supporters.

Finally, with all increase of facilities, corresponding increase of the living spirit of godly life and service, to act with the multiplied wheels, must be ever sought. The policy of the Institution so early adopted to a peculiar degree, of encouraging students in the practice of moral and Christian well-doing, in teaching, preaching and other labors, it is hoped may characterize it through all its future widening prosperity.

Our report brings but the hints of toiling sons of the University, inured to other work than planning improvements which shall perfect a great seat of Christian learning and training. But it brings these hints with a love that cannot be satisfied by a mere looking over the homestead, and telling what our mother ought to do. We see how lovingly and well she has served her wedded work through fifty years—long in poverty, and often in affliction. To her and her work we would gladly, upon this honored day, offer a golden-wedding celebration, so golden, that all which we see her to need, and all which more practised eyes than ours, see her immediately to need, she shall have in her hands the means to supply, as to-morrow she bids us another, and to many of us her last, “Good-by, and God bless you.”

Then, with her richer endowment of the abiding Spirit of God, her next generation should rise up with voices more and more honored than ours, to call her blessed. And she would go out of the nineteenth century with the silver of fourscore years on her “beaming brow,” to be yet a more blessed mother—a Sarah, Princess, whose olden life shall laugh, as her God makes sure to her his promise. "Yea, I will bless her, and she shall be a mother of nations. Kings of people shall be of her."

Respectfully submitted,

SAMUEL HASKELL,

A. H. BURLINGHAM,

REUBEN JEFFERY,

SKETCHES OF ALUMNI.

This volume has room for no more than mere outlines of lives and labors. Not only a careful selection of facts, but much abbreviation of sentences, as well as of words, has, therefore, been a necessity.

Churches and ministers are here Baptist unless otherwise denominated. When no State is given, it is New York.

After 1834 most of the non-graduating students are sketched in connection with the classes to which they belonged; not, as unavoidably before, under the year of entrance. The general catalogue shows under what year each sketch will be found.

Nearly all the men sketched were converted when between sixteen and twenty years of age. The exceptions are noted. They were commonly baptized and licensed either in their native towns or in the places from which they came to the Institution.

FIRST DECADE, 1819-'29.

An edifice for a meeting-house and school-house was soon erected. There being no other Baptist minister within 150 miles of Chicago, he went in all directions preaching and organizing churches. He baptized the first person known to have been baptized in Lake Michigan, and also the first baptized in Fox River. FIRST ADDRESS
THE EDUCATION SOCIETY,
IN 1817.

To the Baptist Denomination throughout the State of New York.

BELOVED BRETHREN,

It has pleased the God of all grace to call his children to a concurrent operation with himself, in transmitting the Gospel, with all its saving benefits, to the perishing inhabitants of this fallen world. He has lodged with his militant church the volume of inspiration, which contains the purposes of his grace to millions for whom the Saviour has died, discloses the eternal destinies of his incorrigible foes, and reveals the ultimate end of all his operations. This book of God is now circulating through the world, by the zeal and agency of men, with a rapidity hitherto unknown. God has also appointed the administration of his word, by instruments which he has chosen among men. He commits to them a dispensation of his Gospel. He gives them his grace, his spirit, and his word; and requires them to go and preach the Gospel to every creature. He gives them no new revelation, but the means of becoming acquainted with the one which is handed down from the apostles and prophets. If they speak not according to this, they stand anathematized by God, and are guilty of the blood of souls. The Spirit that calls them to preach, sends them to the Bible, that they may know what to preach. To know the Bible they must understand its language; and in order to this, they must understand language in general. It is not enough that they become acquainted with a few common-place words; but the root and diversified meaning of terms, together with the structure of language, should be well understood. The Spirit of God is not the teacher of language; the gift of tongues has ceased. God has furnished the means of acquiring this kind of knowledge, and rendered its acquisition dependent on human endeavors.

A like application is necessary to a clear understanding of the doctrine of Scripture. Although it is by the teaching of the Spirit that men understand spiritual things, yet this instruction is usually conveyed through the medium of the letter. Timothy received the following command: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Apollos, knowing only the baptism of John, began to speak boldly in the synagogue; whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly. He then went into Achaia, and helped them much which had believed through grace.

Ministers are stewards of the mysteries of God, and they should be scribes well instructed unto the kingdom of Heaven; and should be able to bring forth out of their treasure things new and old. They have assigned to them the most important and responsible rank below the heavens; they are called to reflect the light of revelation through the dark regions of the world; in a word, they are commanded to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

Is not a knowledge of divinity an indispensable prerequisite for the sacred ministry? Ask our venerable fathers in the Gospel, who have been searching for it as for hid treasures; many of whom, in the absence of ordinary means, by the dint of exertion, have attained to much wisdom. Ask the churches when they repair to the house of God to be taught from the sacred oracles. Ask every inquiring soul apprized of his ruin, and applying to the ministers of the New Testament to know the way of salvation. Their answer is decisive: Knowledge must not be withheld from those that are appointed to teach all men.

But how is the necessary knowledge to be obtained? We have well-regulated schools, academies, and colleges, in which various sciences, highly useful, are taught. But they are far from affording all the advantages which are desirable, and which, by our united exertions, may be obtained for those young men whom God calls to the Gospel Ministry. We are fully of the opinion that a different institution may be established for them, better adapted to the little time many of them have to study, and the means of defraying their expenses, as well as to the preservation of their morals and the promotion of their piety; an institution in which they shall be assisted in the pursuit both of literary and theological knowledge; and in which they shall be directed to such a course of studies as shall be deemed most conducive to their usefulness.

Our brethren in Great Britain, in the Eastern and Middle States, are already engaged in providing such institutions, and are beginning to reap the fruit of their labors. Our brethren in the city of New York and its environs have not been inattentive to this duty.

The duty of establishing one in some more central place in the State, has of late been strongly impressed, we believe, by the Divine Spirit, upon the minds of many of our fathers and brethren. A society for this purpose has been formed, the constitution of which accompanies this. The outlines are taken from the constitutions of other societies having a similar object. We have endeavored to give to it all that maturity which the examples of others and our own observations could afford. A suitable number of assistant agents are appointed in different parts of the State, who, we apprehend, will esteem it a duty and a pleasure to cooperate with us in this undertaking. The numerous calls for preachers of our denomination, and the great number of young men of piety whom God is calling to the Gospel Ministry, render such an institution necessary. The increasing numbers and wealth of our churches render them abundantly able to support one.

BELOVED BRETHREN,

While we pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth faithful laborers into his harvest; while we desire that they should be well instructed unto the kingdom of Heaven; that they should be able to bring forth things new and old; and "able by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers," shall we not accompany our prayers with exertions to provide a suitable seminary for their instruction, and funds for the support of such as are indigent? Those who desire to assist in promoting these objects, may have an opportunity, by presenting their offerings at our first annual meeting, when, by the Divine approbation and blessing, it is expected efficient measures will be adopted.

PETER P. ROOTS, President.

JOEL W. CLARK, Secretary.

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

1817.

THE education of those whom GOD has designed for the Gospel Ministry, is an object of such importance, and so intimately connected with the future prospects of the Church, that no apology will be deemed necessary for addressing the public on this subject. Arguments urged in favor of an object, which is acknowledged by many to be self-evident, may, indeed, seem superfluous; yet this consideration does not forbid an address explanatory of the object in view; and nothing more than this, we trust, will be requisite, in order to secure the patronage and support of all our friends.

We shall, therefore, attempt little more in our present remarks, than to exhibit, fully and explicitly, the design of our institution, and to obviate some probable objections.

In the first place, then, we do not presume that we have a right to dictate to Divine Wisdom on the question, Who shall be devoted to the service of the Sanctuary? This right, we conceive, is the prerogative of GOD—"No man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of GOD, as was Aaron." Ministers of the Gospel are the ambassadors of CHRIST. An ambassador who is self-appointed, or one who is not specially commissioned by his King and Sovereign, acts without authority, and is answerable for the consequence of "running without being sent."

The Gospel Ministry is not on a level with other callings; nor is it left at the option of men to decide according to the dictates of their own feelings or interest, whether they shall set foot on that holy ground or not.

On the subject of preaching the Gospel, St. Paul observes: "If I do this thing WILLINGLY, I HAVE a reward;" that is, if I do it of CHOICE, I have a reward in the gratification of my own feelings, or in the advancement of my interest and reputation in the world: "but if AGAINST my WILL, a dispensation of the Gospel is committed unto me."

Those who take this honor to themselves without being called of GOD must answer for their presumption; while those who have been called and commissioned by the Great Head of the Church, cannot, without incurring much guilt, neglect their high and holy calling.

These being decidedly our sentiments, our friends and brethren will perceive at once that we have no idea of MAKING MINISTERS merely by giving men education. Those who carefully peruse the Constitution, will doubtless be fully satisfied on this point. They will see, at least, that evils of this nature are as effectually guarded against, as they could have been; as those who are to receive the benefit of this Society, must furnish evidence, first to the Churches of which they are members, and afterwards to the Executive Committee, not only of their personal piety, but of their call to the Gospel Ministry.

We do not conceive, that, in order to a man's being usefully employed in the service of the Sanctuary, it is INDISPENSABLY requisite that he should possess very great literary attainments. Such a sentiment would be contradicted by experience. We know, indeed, that some men, without the advantages of classical science, have preached the Gospel with great success, and have been instrumental of much good to the Churches. This being the fact, what is the inference? May we hence infer that learning is wholly useless? By no means. It only proves that very great difficulties have been surmounted, or that men, laboring under serious embarrassments, have been divinely assisted to overcome them.

If, in some instances, the most formidable difficulties have been encountered with success, may we conclude that such difficulties are not to be regarded as evils, against which provision ought to be made?—And if some men of ardent piety and unwearied zeal, though illiterate, have been very useful, is it certain that they would not have been more useful, nay, is it not highly probable that with the same piety and zeal, and the advantages of education, they would have been MORE EXTENSIVELY useful in the world than they were?—If some men, without the sense of seeing, have been able to perform surprising acts of mechanical ingenuity—HAVE been able to distinguish colors by the sense of feeling, and have been useful members of society—shall we hence conclude that our eye-sight is not a blessing, or that a man is as well without it as with it?

It is often said “that men are not always benefited by learning; that it is calculated to render them proud and imperious; and to create, in ministers, self-confidence and self-dependence.” That some learned ministers have possessed these characteristics, we readily admit. But are these the NECESSARY consequences of scientific knowledge? and do they invariably flow from it?—No one, we presume, will say they do.

Should any one hazard the assertion that learning is incompatible with humility and usefulness, we would simply suggest the names of a Watts, a Doddridge, a Gill and a Carey, with a host of others which might be enumerated, who have been alike celebrated for their fervent piety, their extensive usefulness, and their literary attainments.

It is, doubtless, a very true saying, “That learning makes good men better, and bad men worse;” that is, by extending their influence, it enables good men to do more good and wicked men to do more evil in the world, than they would be capable of doing without it. If the maxim just quoted be true, then there is no danger to be apprehended from educating GOOD MEN.

Learning, like every other blessing, is liable to be abused ; and this is assigned by some as a reason why ministers should not be assisted to an education—"perhaps they will make a bad use of it." But is this a solid and sufficient reason for withholding from them the means of instruction ?

The argument stands thus : SOME ministers have made an improper use of their learning, therefore, it must be WITHHELD from ALL ; or in other words, more evil than good may POSSIBLY result from education, therefore, it is not best to incur the risk.

Now, if this be a sufficient reason for not educating those who are called to preach the Gospel, the same reason requires that we should not give our children a COMMON EDUCATION. We know not whether it will be to them a blessing or a curse. We teach them to read, yet possibly in consequence of this, by means of some ill-chosen books, their moral taste may become more vitiated, their minds corrupted, and their souls destroyed. We teach them to write, yet who can foretell, but in consequence of this faculty they may betake themselves to certain habits of vice, may forge and counterfeit, and do a thousand wicked things, of which they would have been utterly incapable, had they never been taught the art of writing.

That men should be able to read and write, is, in our days, thought to be highly necessary and desirable, yet, the fact that numerous evils have resulted from those acquired faculties, is undeniable. Is it, therefore, best, on the whole, that children be taught the art of reading and writing? We answer, Yes ; and the reason is, that in all probability they will derive advantages from those attainments. So in respect to the education of the pious, whom GOD has designed for his own peculiar service, we have the strongest probability that a year or two spent under the tuition of some suitable instructor, would be to them, and to the churches of our LORD, a source of lasting benefit.

We are fully sensible that we are not required to bestow learning upon every one. Men who are wanting in point of modesty and humility—men of a haughty and self-confident spirit, or those who appear not to realize their dependence on GOD for strength and ability to act in his name, if any such have been licensed, or approbated as preachers—are not to expect the aid of this Society.

The design of this Institution is to assist those, and those only, who are humble, pious, and devout, who with good sense and a sound judgment unite an aptness to teach, and whose hearts' desire and prayer to GOD is that they may be usefully employed in building up the Redeemer's kingdom in the world. That there are in our Churches young men of this description, is a fact well ascertained. Their hearts expand with love to GOD and the souls of men; the state of a perishing world weighs down their troubled spirits; the voice of the Spirit sounds continually in their ears, "Go thou, and preach the kingdom of GOD." Gladly would they obey the heavenly mandate, but a sense of their insufficiency, realized in view of the greatness of the work; inability to exhibit the mystery of godliness; their ignorance of language and the use of words; all these embarrassments, added to a sense of their own unworthiness, seem to them obstacles too great to be surmounted. They sink, perhaps, in discouragement; their worth is not fully known, and their usefulness is greatly contracted. If such men had suitable persons to take them by the hand, to strengthen and encourage them, and to afford them that instruction which they need, is it not in the HIGHEST degree PROBABLE that both they, and the people to whom they should afterwards minister, would realize the benefit of it through life?

—Would it not be calculated to enlarge the sphere of their influence, of course, to increase their power of doing good? Would it not be conducive to soundness of faith as well as soundness of speech? both of which are inculcated by the apostle. Improving their gifts occasionally under such instructors, would they not, in a short time, be enabled to correct themselves of a thousand erroneous notions, awkward habits, and inaccurate expressions? Although the matter of a man's preaching is the point of greatest importance, yet it must be confessed that not a little depends on the manner.

Another argument, sometimes suggested as a reason why it is needless that ministers should be educated, is the following: "If a man is called to preach, GOD will qualify him for the work."

Though we are well persuaded that no man ought to approach the altar of the LORD unless he has been called of GOD and commissioned for that office, we are equally well persuaded that a man who is thus called has a duty TOWARD HIMSELF, as well as a duty toward GOD and his people. He must "take heed to himself and to his ministry, that he fulfil it." He must "study to show himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed; RIGHTLY dividing the word of truth, not handling it UNSKILFULLY." He must be able, by sound speech and "sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." For this purpose he must enrich his mind with useful knowledge, and especially with a knowledge of language. Being apt to teach, this aptitude must be cultivated and improved. In order that his "profiting may appear unto all," or in other words, in order that his improvement in knowledge and in the science of salvation may be manifest to all, he must, according to St. Paul, "give attendance to reading," as well as to exhortation and to doctrine. He must not only "meditate upon these things" occasionally, but he must "give himself WHOLLY to them."

That man acts a presumptuous part who says, "I can do nothing of myself, therefore I will make no exertion, but will depend altogether on the blessing of GOD and the aids of his Spirit to render me useful in the world." The memorable words of the excellent Dr. Watts are not to be forgotten: "Study without prayer is infidelity; prayer without study is presumption."

It is said, "The apostles, who preached the Gospel with unrivalled success, were illiterate men." It is doubtless true, that, in respect to human science, the most of them were unlearned. It is equally true, however, that they enjoyed many important advantages, with which preachers of our days are not favored; for, in addition to a personal acquaintance with their Divine Master, they were aided by the extraordinary influences of the Holy Spirit, had the power of working miracles, the gift of prophecy, and the gift of tongues. Ministers, we trust, do still enjoy, in common with all believers, what may be denominated the ordinary influences of the Spirit, and some exercises peculiar to themselves as ministers, but that they are inspired, in the same manner and in the same degree as the apostles were, is not to be supposed. "The apostles spake with tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance;" but now, if the Gospel is preached in any foreign language, that language must be acquired by patient and laborious study.

Learning, like edged tools, is a bad thing in bad hands. There are some men who would not be benefited by literature, nor with it would they be useful to others. There are others again, who would derive from it the most essential benefit, as every candid man will readily allow. This being the case, the only question of importance which remains to be determined seems to be this: Have we men of sufficient judgment and discernment to determine on the candidates who ought to be assisted?

The question, Who are proper subjects of pecuniary assistance? must, we are sensible, be a very important one; but we trust there are men who are not only competent to judge in respect to this matter, but who are every way worthy of our highest confidence. It is only for the Society to place such men in office, and they are safe as to the use that will be made of their money. Who would not blush to acknowledge that he was afraid or unwilling to trust his friends and brethren, even the best of them, with the disposal of a small proportion of his property?

Nothing more, we trust, need be said, in order that our friends should be convinced of their duty. It remains with them to decide whether our worthy, pious, and promising young brethren, of indigent circumstances, be assisted or not—whether they shall remain in obscurity unassisted, their labors circumscribed to a narrow circle, or whether they shall be extensively known and usefully employed in the world—whether with aching hearts, they shall continue struggling under difficulties and embarrassments, and looking in vain to their unfeeling brethren for help, or whether those difficulties shall be removed. They have also to decide the important question, whether we shall have a respectable Seminary for the education of young men of our persuasion, as well those who are able as those who are indigent; or, whether we shall have none at all.

The Baptists are, probably, as numerous in this State as any denomination, perhaps more so; and yet they have not a single President or Professor in any of the Colleges. Other denominations have taken the lead, and we have consented to remain inactive.

As to the practicability of the object contemplated by this Society nothing can be more easy, provided our friends and brethren see fit to sanction it. Let every person of our sentiment, through the State, do his duty; let the efforts and the energies of all be combined or concentrated in one point, and where is the difficulty? It vanishes; it is gone.

From what little has been done, we see what, with suitable exertion, may probably be done in other places. In one small town and its vicinity, where, till of late, the Baptist interest was very low, more than $900 have been collected, and this is probably the only town in which a thorough trial has been made to see what might be obtained. The object, we are sensible, will not be carried into effect without active exertion and proper management on the part of its friends. But we feel safe in supposing an object of such importance, and one which promises so much utility, will find friends and patrons in every part of our State; and no one, we are confident, will oppose it, who rightly understands the design of the Institution.

Friends of Truth and Religion!—As it is in behalf of indigent young men in the ministry that we ask your aid and solicit your bounty, you will permit us to remind you of the Divine promise, “He that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the LORD.” Let those who are satisfied with the security thus offered, evince it by their conduct.

STATE OF NEW YORK: SECRETARY'S OFFICE. I have compared the preceding with an original law on file in this office, and do certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto affixed the seal of this office at the city of Albany, the 7th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1846.

ARCH'D CAMPBELL, Dep. Sec. of State.

At the annual meeting of the Education Society, Aug. 18, 1846, Hon. IRA HARRIS, of Albany, offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted :

Resolved, That this Society approve of the recent successful effort made by their Board of Trustees, to procure from the State Legislature an Act of Incorporation for Madison University, and also the subsequent arrangement entered into with the Board of the University, whereby the said charter has been made available to the Literary Department of the Hamilton Institution.

THE FIRST COMPACT.

THE following Terms of Arrangement were agreed upon in joint conference of the two Boards, adopted by each Board, June 9th, 1847, and ratified by the Education Society, August 18th, 1847 :

Resolved, That this Conference recommend to the Board of the Education Society and to the Board of the University, such terms of arrangement as shall preserve, under the charge of one faculty, the several departments; and that shall, at the same time, secure to the Education Board the control of the Theological Instruction.

Resolved, That we suggest the following as the outline of such arrangement :

1. That to the appointment of the Theological Professors, the act of the Education Board shall be sufficient; but to the removal of such Professors, the joint action of both Boards shall be requisite.

2. That to the Education Society shall be reserved the exclusive control of any endowments for Theological Professorships, and to the Board of the University the exclusive control of any endowments for Literary Professorships.

3. The Education Society to grant to the University the use of their property, [a schedule of which is attached,] to be employed for purposes of instruction. The Education Society to have the power of reclaiming the property thus granted, after two years' notice given of their purpose, and with the reasons assigned therefor, in such notice.

4. The University shall sustain on the premises an Institution, in which candidates for the Christian Ministry may receive suitable instruction. The Education Board to have the privilege of rooms free of rent, for all their Beneficiaries, among such candidates, paying, however, for such Beneficiaries, the regular charges for tuition, and sending none of the Beneficiaries to any other Institution.

5. The University shall sustain the whole expense of instruction, both in the Literary and Theological departments, receiving, however, from the Education Society, the income of their endowments for Theological education ; such endowments to include the existing permanent funds for the support of Professorships, (and any funds hereafter to be collected, for the support of Theological Professorships,) as also the legacy of JOHN FLEETWOOD MARSH.

6. The University Board is to make earnest and extended efforts for the collection of an endowment sufficiently large, to exempt from the necessity of continued appeals to the Churches, but never so increased as to foster inaction in the Faculty, or independence of the Churches. The sum at present contemplated to be fifty thousand dollars, of which twenty-five thousand dollars shall be invested by the Education Society, with the advice of the University Board, for the endowment of Theological Professorships. The remaining twenty-five thousand to be invested by the University, the proceeds to be applied to the support of literary and scientific instruction.

The Conference farther resolved :

1. That these arrangements take effect Sept. 1st, 1847.

2. That the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, and Albany, be surrendered to the Board of Madison University, for the collection of the current expenses of said Board, for two years from the first of September next.

3. That no new Professorship shall be constituted by the Board of the Education Society without the consent of the University Board.

The Education Society, August 18th, 1847, made the following amendment to the first Article, and the same was adopted by the University Board :

“That the Board of the University shall appoint such Professors in the Theological Department as may be nominated by the Baptist Education Society of the State of New York, and shall also remove such Professors in that Department as that Society may direct.

SECOND COMPACT.

THE following Articles of Agreement were recommended in joint conference of both Boards, and adopted by each Board separately, Feb. 9th, 1853 :

1. The Institution consists of a Theological Seminary, a University proper, and an Academic Department organized under one Faculty, with one Code of Laws, the maintenance and general management of which, until otherwise directed by the Education Society, are in the hands of the Board of Madison University.

2. The power to make laws for the general regulation and discipline of the School in all its Departments resides with the Board of Madison University ; but to prescribe the course of study in the Theological Seminary, including the text-books, belongs to the Board of the Education Society. While the President shall direct in the government and discipline of the University proper and Academic Department, the senior Theological Professor and the President shall be associated as Peers in the government and discipline of the Theological Seminary ; but cases of suspension and expulsion shall be referred to the whole Faculty.

3. The Laws to be given by the University Board, as a guide to the Faculty in governing the School, shall fully recognize the prerogatives of each Professor, in his respective Department.

4. The University having been created by the Education Society, through the State Legislature, to carry out its design in reference to Education, is bound to frame all its laws, and conduct all its operations, in harmony with the terms of compact existing between it and the Education Society.

GENERAL VIEW

OF THE

Present Organization, Condition, and Prospects.

NOTE. The Faculties of Instruction, as given below, are as they existed in Aug., 1869. For changes since the Semi-Centenary, see the University Catalogue.

I. HAMILTON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

This Seminary, founded in 1819, is under the care of the "BAPTIST EDUCATION SOCIETY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK." Established and sustained by Baptists, it has remained true, alike to the great doctrines held in common by evangelical Christians, and to the distinctive principles of the Baptist denomination, to which it has ever given an unflinching, decided expression. Its graduates number more than six hundred.

LOCATION.—Hamilton, located in one of the healthiest and most beautiful regions of Central New York, in the midst of an intelligent and cultivated community, offers to the student the advantages of a quiet and congenial retreat for study, exempted from the interruptions necessarily incident to life in the city; while, by its ample railroad facilities, it is in direct and speedy communication with the great centres of commercial activity.

FACULTY.

REV. GEO. W. EATON, D.D., LL.D., President and Professor of Homiletics and Practical Theology.

REV. EBENEZER DODGE, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Biblical Theology.

REV. A. M. BEEBEE, D.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History.

REV. HEZEKIAH HARVEY, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism and Pastoral Theology.

ADMISSION.—Students from all Christian denominations are admitted. They are required to furnish letters from their respective Churches, either licensing them to preach, or approving of their studying for the ministry. They are also expected to submit to the officers a statement of their Christian experience and call to the ministry.

COURSE OF STUDY.—The regular Course of Study is designed for Graduates of Colleges, and others whose attainments may enable them to pursue it with profit. It is completed in two years. It embraces, however, a thorough investigation of all the topics usually pursued in the more extended period, and is compressed within two years only as the result of special advantages—provision being made in the University for the study of the elements of Hebrew, and of the Christian Evidences, and the favoring circumstances of the location enabling students to prosecute their work with less interruption.

SPECIAL COURSE.—Students, whose age or attainments do not permit the completion of the regular course, are admitted to a special course, embracing Sacred History, Interpretation of the English Scriptures, Church History, Systematic Theology, Pastoral Duties, and Preparation and Delivery of Sermons.

INSTRUCTION.—The object of instruction in this Seminary has been, not to impress a common stamp upon the minds of its students, but to secure the best development of individual power, consecrated to Christ. The spirit illustrated and inculcated has been in harmony with the sacredness of the ministerial calling, and with that unselfish devotion to spiritual results which “covets earnestly the best gifts” for the best usefulness.

EXAMINATIONS.—Public Examinations are held at the close of each year, conducted in the presence of a Committee appointed by the Board of Trustees, and the favorable report of this committee is, in each case, necessary to graduation. Graduates from Colleges, who have received their first Degree, are entitled, on completing the course in the Seminary, to the degree of A.M., from the University.

BENEFICIARIES.—To those whose circumstances require, aid is furnished by the “Baptist Education Society of the State of New York,” in sums suited to their needs. Address Rev. H. A. Smith, Fin. and Cor. Sec., Hamilton, N. Y.

EXPENSES.—No charge is made for tuition or room-rent. Incidental expenses, $3.00 per Term. Board varies from $3.00 to $4.00 per week. In clubs it is obtained at a lower rate. The Utica, Clinton, and Binghamton R. R., and the N. Y. and O. Midland R. R., connect

Hamilton with all points north and south, east and west, and furnish abundant facilities for Sabbath preaching, by which the student may, to some extent, aid himself.

CALENDAR.—The year commences on the second Thursday in September. The Commencement of the Seminary occurs Tuesday, June 18th, followed by a vacation of twelve weeks.

ADDRESS.—All communications in reference to entering the Seminary should be made to Rev. E. Dodge, D.D., Hamilton, N. Y.

II. MADISON UNIVERSITY.

REV. E. DODGE, D.D., LL.D., President.

This University, reckoning from the foundation of the "Hamilton Literary and Theological Seminary," has reached the FIFTY-SECOND year of its history. Never before has it been so well officered, or so amply furnished with the facilities for thorough Collegiate instruction. It embraces two courses, the Classical and Scientific. Its ten professorships are ably filled by men of established and growing reputation. The LIBRARY contains about 8,000 volumes of choice works, mainly selected with reference to the aid which they would directly render both to Faculty and students. For its size, it is one of the very best collections of works in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and Modern Languages, in History, Natural Science, English and Classical Literature, Ethics, and Theology.

The CHEMICAL and PHILOSOPHICAL APPARATUS are excellent, while the CABINET of GEOLOGY and MINERALOGY, and a very rare and valuable COLLECTION in ORNITHOLOGY and CONCHOLOGY are admirably adapted for thorough instruction in Natural Science.

PRIZES for best Entrance Examinations, for Declamations, for English Essays, for Original Orations, and for Excellence in Classical Study, are so distributed throughout the Course as to encourage and recognize distinguished literary, oratorical, and scholarly merit.

FACULTY.

EBENEZER DODGE, D.D., LL.D., President and Professor of Metaphysics and Evidences of Revealed Religion.

GEORGE W. EATON, D.D., LL.D., Bleecker Professor of Moral Philosophy.

PHILETUS B. SPEAR, D.D., Professor of Hebrew, and Treasurer.

ALEXANDER M. BEEBEE, D.D., Professor of Civil History.

LUCIEN M. OSBORN, A.M., Professor of the Natural Sciences.

N. LLOYD ANDREWS, A.M., Professor of the Greek Language and Literature, and Librarian.

JOHN J. LEWIS, A.M., Professor of Logic and English Literature.

EDWARD JUDSON, A.M., Professor of the Latin and Modern Languages.

ALBERT S. BICKMORE, A.M., Ph.D., Professor of Natural History.

HEZEKIAH HARVEY, D.D., Professor of Sacred Literature.

JAMES M. TAYLOR, A.M., Professor of Pure Mathematics.

COURSE OF STUDY.—The University aims to impart the largest discipline and power to all the mental faculties, and by a well-arranged course of instruction, designed both to conserve the old and to recognize the new, in the processes and subjects of study, so far as approved by enlightened experience, to prepare the student for professional studies or for other pursuits in life. By improved methods of classical teaching, it is sought to make room for the Natural Sciences, without loss of true classical culture.

EXPENSES.—Tuition is $30 per year, payable each Term in advance. Incidental expenses, $9 per year. Room-rent $9 per year. Ministerial students are not charged with room-rent. All students furnish their own rooms.

Board at the University Boarding Hall is furnished for $3 per week. In clubs it is obtained at a still lower rate. In private families, table-board ranges from $3 to $4 per week.

AID.—The Education Society aids ministerial students in sums which vary according to their necessities. No one of approved talent and character will fail of adequate assistance. Address Rev. H. A. Smith, Hamilton, N. Y. The University has seven general scholarships, from $30 to $105 each, and forty Trevor scholarships, for soldiers, their sons, brothers, etc., at $30 to $90 each. Respecting these, address Prof. P. B. Spear, D.D.

ACCESS.—Railroads are penetrating the vicinity of Hamilton from all directions. 1. The Utica, Clinton, and Binghamton R. R., now the Utica Division of the Midland Railroad, passes directly through Hamilton, and with its branch, the Rome and Clinton R. R., furnishes easy transit to and from the New York Central R. R., and connects with the Midland for the south. 2. The New York and Oswego Midland R. R. passes through Smith's Valley, two miles from the University, and all trains on the Utica Division make connections with it. This trunk-road to New York, with its branches and connections, affords excellent facilities. It is the proper route for those on the line of the Albany and Susquehanna R. R. 3. The Utica Division of the Delaware and Lackawanna R. R., running through trains to and from New York, and connecting with the Erie R. R. at Binghamton, passes through Poolville, four miles distant, and at Norwich connects with the Midland R. R.

LOCATION.—Hamilton is no less beautiful than ever, and is improving by the laying out of new streets, which will afford healthful and delightful building-sites for city or country patrons who wish to remove hither for the education of their sons and daughters in a well-graded system of schools, or, for any purpose, wish a village residence.

ENLARGEMENT.—The University is not indifferent to the new elements of growth and power which a few years have introduced, but intends to make them available in furnishing means of culture which shall, in this consecrated spot, meet the highest demands of the age. While the raising of the Jubilee Fund has brought financial aid, large sums are still needed to provide for an expansion that shall keep pace with the progress of the age. It is hoped that the attention of patrons and friends will be directed to the importance of increasing the Library Fund and the General Endowment Fund, or to creating other distinct Funds and Chairs of Instruction which the growth and highest usefulness of the University demand.

CALENDAR.—COMMENCEMENT—The third Wednesday in June.
FALL TERM—Begins twelve weeks after Commencement. WINTER TERM—Begins the third day of January, and closes the fourth Wednesday of March. SUMMER TERM—Begins the Monday following the fourth Wednesday in March.

III. GRAMMAR-SCHOOL.

PROF. JAMES M. TAYLOR, A.M., Principal.

*GEORGE F. ARNOLD, A.B., Tutor of Languages.

The Grammar-School, or Academy, has a well-balanced Classical and English Course, designed to fit young men for College or for the active pursuits of life. It is under the general supervision of the President and Faculty of the University, and special direction of the Principal. No pains will be spared to make it meet its design.

ENLARGEMENT.—The course of preparatory study will hereafter embrace three years, and it is intended to arrange a parallel course of three years in English and Scientific studies for those who do not propose a college course. While the preparatory course will remain equally prominent and thorough, provision will be more fully made for a general academic training. Measures are in progress for so setting apart the Grammar-School, by a distinct building and separate appliances, as to afford facilities for this wider scope.

EXPENSES AND AID.—Tuition in the Grammar-School is $20 per year. Other expenses the same as in the University. The provisions made for pecuniary assistance in the University are, for the most part, equally applicable to the Grammar-School.

CALENDAR.—The Academic Year is uniform with that of the University, ending with the Grammar-School Exhibition the Friday before Commencement.

CONSTITUTION

Of the Baptist Education Society of the State of New York.

ART. 1. The object of this Society shall be to furnish the means of instruction to such young men of the Baptist denomination as shall give to the Churches of which they are members, and to the Faculty of the Institution under the patronage of the Society, satisfactory evidence of their personal piety, and of their call to the Gospel Ministry.

ART. 2. Any person may become a member of this Society by paying into the Treasury, annually, the sum of one dollar; or a member for life by paying twenty dollars, at any one time, or in four equal annual installments.

ART. 3. The officers of the Society shall consist of a President, Vice-President, a Corresponding Secretary and a Treasurer. These, with thirty Directors, shall constitute a BOARD OF TRUSTEES, who shall be elected at each annual meeting of the Society, seven of whom shall be a quorum. All the members of the Board, and other acting officers, as well as the immediate beneficiaries of the Society, shall be members in good standing of some regular Baptist Church.

ART. 4. The BOARD OF TRUSTEES shall transact the business of the Society; take charge of its property, fill vacancies in their own body; appoint beneficiaries and necessary Agents; keep a faithful record of their proceedings, and make an annual report of the same to the Society. The Board shall have the especial oversight of the THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY connected with the Madison University; shall direct the course of instruction in this department; secure, as far as practicable, endowments for it; and appoint Professors and Teachers; doing all things in accordance with arrangements authorized by the University Charter and existing between the two Boards.

ART. 5. The Treasurer shall receive all moneys and other property belonging to the Society, and make investments of the same in the name of the Society, in the safest and most productive forms, under the direction of the Board, shall make payments of money from time to time agreeably to the order of the Board; shall render to the Society, annually, a written account of all the receipts and expenditures within the year; of the amount of its funds and the manner in which they are invested; he shall give to the Board, whenever they request it, a particular account of the state of the treasury, or of any portion of its funds; he shall also give full and ample security to the Board for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office.

The Treasurer's accounts, before they are presented to the Society, shall be audited by a committee appointed by the Board for that purpose.

ART. 6. The Society may appoint a discretionary number of Honorary Vice-Presidents, and any person may become an Honorary Life Director by paying into the treasury the sum of fifty dollars, and shall have a right to sit and deliberate in all meetings of the Board.

ART. 7. The President, and, in his absence, the Vice-President, shall have power, at the request of three Directors, to call special meetings of the Society, by giving due public notice thereof.

ART. 8. The annual meetings of the Society shall be held at such time and places as the Board may direct, unless the Society shall have otherwise determined.

ART. 9. Any alterations may be made in this Constitution at an annual meeting by a vote of three-fourths of the members present, provided that notice shall have been given one year previous.

GRADUATES OF THE FULL THEOLOGICAL COURSE, 415.

COLLEGE GRADUATES WHO TOOK A YEAR OR MORE OF THE THEOLOGICAL COURSE, 104.

Graduates of the Shorter Course and of the Scientific Course who also graduated in theology, more than a hundred; making a total of over six hundred theological students besides those who are on the list of non-graduates, many of whom studied Hebrew and theology.

COLLEGIATE GRADUATES.

THE course of study in the Hamilton Lit. and Theol. Inst. being gradually developed and extended, the present division into Grammar-School, University, and Theological Seminary, was not made until 1833, and no Collegiate Class was graduated until 1835.

The mark (||) indicates, up to 1856, what was known as the Shorter Course; since 1856 it indicates the Scientific Course, and implies the degree of B. P.

TOTAL OF COLLEGIATE GRADUATES, 641.

NON-GRADUATE STUDENTS.

THE year is that of entrance. Up to 1830, no data exist by which to ascertain the length of time spent in the Institution. To this point, therefore, the names are alphabetically arranged. From 1830 onward, they are arranged according to the relative length of their student-life in Hamilton, varying from one to five years.

Names at the beginning of each group under the respective years of entrance are of those who remained longest; names at the end of each group, of those whose stay was most brief; names in the right-hand column follow the last of the left-hand column. The gradation is believed to be, if not absolutely, at least substantially, accurate.

Such as pursued theological studies only, or in addition to previous literary studies, will be found, after the year 1838, also under the head of "Theological Graduates," appropriately distinguished from them. A few of such, before entering the Theological Seminary, had graduated from some other college. Others of the following list subsequently graduated from other Institutions. In both these cases, the fact of graduation elsewhere, if known, is stated in the sketches of all such from whom reports have been received.

TOTAL OF NON-GRADUATE STUDENTS..... 1448.

GENERAL CATALOGUE.

In this Catalogue a date following a student's name indicates the year of the Collegiate Graduation of the class to which he belonged; but does not necessarily imply that the student himself graduated. This can be ascertained by referring to the preceding lists of Graduates. Students who belonged to different classes are generally here placed in those with which they were last connected.

A date with the prefix "ent" signifies the year of entrance, and commonly, but not invariably, has reference to the Academic Department.

The prefix "thl" denotes the year of class graduation from the Theological Department, and is applied to those only who were not graduates of the Collegiate Department, but usually of some other College.

A fully-written date shows under what year a sketch of the student will be found. An abbreviated date implies that there is no sketch.

The number of sketches is about eleven hundred. The number of students is over twenty-three hundred. This Catalogue includes not only non-graduate students, but all under-graduates who had entered the Institution before the Jubilee.

There are about three hundred names marked with the sign (*) of decease. No names are so accompanied without authentic information. The number of the deceased is doubtless much greater than that here given.
